Top Secret

7 October 1936

To copy of report by Mr. G. Leese, H.M. Consul, on activities in the Borana Service during the period Apr - Aug 1936.

The report embodies and expands the information on our files in regard to the happenings on the Kenya-Abyssinia frontier between April and August, 1936. The narrative makes interesting reading and is supplemented by "Notes concerning the Norwegian and Swedish Red Cross Units" and "Notes on Italian methods of warfare and administration employed near the Kenya frontier".

In sum, there have been very few serious frontier incidents. The Italians have agreed temporarily to accept the boundary line and the arrangements concerning watering and grazing that had been observed in former times by the Ethiopian Government. But bearing in mind the fact that it is old-established Italian colonial policy to refuse trans-frontier watering and grazing facilities to neighbouring nomadic tribes and to entice as many people as possible into their own territory, it is not anticipated that in the future the situation on the frontier, where nearly all the wells are on the Ethiopian side of the boundary, will necessarily remain either easy or satisfactory.

The following points are of particular interest in the report:-

Paragraph 4. The results of urging the Gurren, Boran and Dogodia tribes.

Paragraph 9. The flight of tribesmen into British territory, pursued by Abyssinian troops.

Paragraph 15. The murder of Messrs. Mitchell and Devers by Arusi tribesmen.

Paragraph 22. The Italian obsession that all kinds of assistance was being given to Ras Desta by the Kenya Government.

Paragraph 23-24. The occupation of Moga and Loyalo.

Paragraph 31. Italian efforts to collect rifles from tribesmen.

Paragraph 38. Attempts made by Italians to burn forests in order to dislodge Abyssinian tribesmen.

Paragraph 40. Italian deserters from Ethiopia assisting the Abyssinians. These figure soldiers must have deserted at the same time as the men now interned in Kenya.

Paragraph 42. The freeing of slaves by Italians impossible because they had exchanged their Abyssinian masters.

Paragraph 58. fence sitting tactics of the tribes astride the frontier while they made up their minds whether to live in the territory occupied by the Italians or in Kenya.

Paragraph 61. A certain number crossed over at Giddajuma and near Sololo and will probably now stay in Ethiopia.

Paragraph 62. But a certain number of Abyssinians have crossed into Kenya.

The notes of the administration of the occupied territory disclose that with townships dwellers the issue is clearly black v. white. Whatever hatred there may have been of the Christian Abyssinian is forgotten, and news of the war is eagerly sought always in the hope that there may be indications of the coming defeat of the Italians. Mr. Reece concludes his report by saying that though there is much that may be criticized in connection with the Italian methods of warfare, pacification and administration, the fact remains that, at present at any rate, they do evidently desire, and intend to try, to keep the peace on the Kenya frontier. They have already made it clear that they are doing all they can to stop tribal raids and murders and to prevent friction being caused by soldiers.

It is a pity that only one copy of the report has been sent home. The F.O., T.G. and Air Ministry will be interested to see it. Circulate in original, to F.O. in the first instance for perusal and return.

In saying it has been read with interest & that it is being circulated to the 3. W.O. offices.

SIR,

I have the honour to transmit to you the accompanying copy of a despatch from His Majesty's Consul for Southern Ethiopia, now established at Moyale, under cover of which Mr Reece has furnished a most valuable report on events in his district from April to August, 1936.

2. Whilst the account of events which forms the first part of Mr Reece's report is most useful as giving for the first time a clear and coherent picture of the course of the campaign generally associated with the name of General Gelsom, perhaps even greater interest attaches to the "Notes on Italian methods of warfare and administration" which follow. In addition to the experience of Italian methods and mentality gained by first-hand observation, combined with his knowledge of the peoples with whom they now find themselves in contact, Mr Reece has further equipped himself by a study of the Italian press, with its peculiar presentation of affairs, both within Italy and without, and its revelations of Italian aspirations, foibles and attitude towards the many novel problems with which their "imperial" heritage confronts them. It seems to me that Mr Reece has observed with discrimination and in his provisional conclusions has maintained a detached impartiality which lends them an added value.

Sir,

I have the honour to submit herewith a copy of a paper which I have written entitled "A Narrative of Happenings in the Province of Boruwa in Ethiopia from April to August, 1936".

2. It is probable that it contains little, if any, information that is new and that has already been sent to you by the Kenya Government, but perhaps it may be of some use in your archives as a summary of the more important events that took place near the Kenya Frontier during that time.

3. I should like to take this opportunity of explaining that on my return here at the end of May I was told by the Kenya Government that they were sending to you every week, and at other times, all the information that was transmitted to them by the Officer in Charge of the Northern Frontier and myself, and that it was therefore unnecessary for me to send you separate messages or reports. I have therefore refrained from doing so.

I have the honour to be,

A HISTORY OF ITALY
IN THE PROVINCE OF HORABA IN ETHIOPIA.

FROM APRIL TO AUGUST

1936.

OBJECTS OF AGOSTINI'S OCCUPATION
OF ODO
AND LIBAN

In January, General Agostini had advanced from Golo and had occupied the desert of Odo which lies between the Juba and the Buna Rivers.

He garrisoned two posts, one at Gugolfi, near the Idembo mountains, and one at Salch Merri, on the Kenya frontier.

2. By occupying this worthless piece of country, two objects had been achieved. The people in Italy had been given the satisfaction of hearing of a victory and an advance at a time when the war was not progressing too well and there was also removed the menace of a push in the ribs in the neighbourhood of Lugh from Ras Desta Dastu (1).

Having got as far as Gugolfi, the Italians did little more for five months. Indeed they were fairly well occupied in protecting and feeding themselves in their exposed position in the Liban plateau.

3. They did however continue work on the two roads from Golo to Gugolfi - one along the Buna River and the other via Filtu - and they started to build a road at Melka Guba (between Ag. Odo and Tejna) and also at Melka Burri.

(1) Actually the seriousness of a possible invasion into Italian territory by Ras Desta's army had been exaggerated for he had only a comparatively small ill-equipped, and inadequately trained force, with very few good officers and scanty supplies.

It was claimed in Italy that this advance also served another useful purpose. (Vide Il Giornale d'Italia 24th January 1936)

"The first effect is to cut off completely the activity between Ethiopia and British Kenya which has been lavish in every way with supplies to the Ethiopian forces and in suggesting movements to them".

PREPAREATIONS
FOR FURTHER

They began also to prepare the ground further west for the next stage of their advance. This was done by somewhat peculiar methods. Rifles were distributed both at Guggelli and Balkan Surri, apparently without discrimination, to Gurreh, Boran, and Degodia tribesmen with the evident intention that they should go forth and kill as many Ethiopians as possible. (1)

4. But unfortunately since all of these tribes are enemies of each other with feuds of long standing, the results of this device were different from what was intended. A few Ethiopian patrols were indeed attacked and odd Ethiopian soldiers were murdered, but the main effect was simply to turn all the country on the Kenya Frontier between Balkan Surri and Moyale into a worse bogarden than had been seen for many years.

5. Most of the trouble was caused by the Gurreh, who were led by a young man of the name of Hassan Gababa. This creature had not long before been given the rank of Grazmach by the Emperor Haile Selassie for espionage in Italian Somaliland, and he had made great preparation to fight the Italians; but like all the other local tribesmen, on the appearance of the enemy he deemed it wiser to be on the winning side.

6. Much heed was paid to Hassan Gababa by the Italian officials, and he and his men were consequently able to do a great deal of mischief. The Gabra tribe suffered most at their hands for they were weak and had few rifles. A large proportion of their stock was stolen by Gurreh youths armed with Italian rifles.

(1) The following reference was made to this procedure in the "Giornale d'Italia" on 14th March 1936.
 "The armed bands recently formed composed of natives of the Bigdien tribes, also Boran peoples around Mucodi who submitted to us on our arrival. We have armed these bands with Italian rifles, mostly captured by the people themselves from the former Amhara oppressors....The guerrilla warfare by the bands against the remainder of Ras Desta's army is absolutely without quarter".

about six miles N.E. of Moyale, and destroyed two villages of Boran, killing about fifty people.

11. This state of affairs naturally led to the flight of a large number of tribesmen into Kenya, and a great deal of trouble and anxiety was caused to the British officials in dealing with them.

12. The situation had soon become beyond the control of the Ethiopians. They evacuated Gashaburu, and confined themselves to maintaining a garrison of several hundred men at Daga and in the country between there and the Juba River, and a few score at Moyale, (1) but it cannot be said that any serious or adequate attempts were made either to control the tribes or to prepare for the defence of the country against the impending invasion. In April a raid was made by Ethiopians on the Italian post at Walka Guba and a number of casualties were incurred by the Italians, but they were not driven out.

13. But while this was going on in Borana, Ras Desta who, after his defeat on the Juba River, had withdrawn to Wedara and Adola in Sidamo was in a much stronger position. He had with him Dejazmach Gabra Mariam, the former Governor of Harar and Minister of the Interior, and also Dejazmach Nakonnen, Governor of Sidamo, both of whom had brought with them large and fairly well equipped armies.

14. Soon after their arrival at Muggeli, General Agostini's forces had actually occupied Wedara (the Ethiopians withdrew on 20th January) but they afterwards returned to Muggeli, deeming it unsafe to remain there.

There were then several engagements, two of which at least were of some consequence.

After 6th June a detachment from the Muggeli garrison under the guidance of a certain Fitaurari

(1) - occasional patrols were sent out from Daga and Moyale.

SITUATION

Ademo Ambasso who had deserted from Ras Desta's army, attacked a force of Dejarmach Gabra Mariam's men near Nadara, and were badly defeated. In this action a number of white troops were killed. A few weeks later Dejarmach Gabra Mariam himself with some of his men encircled Huggeli and succeeded in ambushing an Italian convoy bringing supplies from Dolo. A quantity of material was captured by the Ethiopians.

15. During this period there were also several raids made by parties of Abyssinians over the Juba River into the territory between Huggeli and Dolo, and in consequence the main road between these two places became unsafe. Use seems to have been made to a large extent of the new road along the Laau River, though this was not very satisfactory during the wet weather. It had been made very close to the river, and in places was flooded when the river rose.

16. Though Ras Desta was in a much better position in the Sidamo mountains than were the people of Borana, his security was constantly threatened by internal troubles in that area.

At the beginning of April, the Amusi tribe, just beyond the Sidamo boundary, became completely out of hand. They destroyed the village of Huggeli (another Huggeli about 50 miles North of Irra Alom) and murdered many Amharas. They also killed sixty Abyssinian soldiers who were escorting a large caravan loaded with hides and coffee, and murdered (on May 9th) two missionaries from Irra Alom (Messrs. Mitchell and Devora) who were trying to reach Addis Ababa.

17. A little later, in April, there was a war between the people of Kambata and Walano, and this was with difficulty stopped by the Government soldiery.

At the same time in Sidamo the Jam Jantu tribes became troublesome, and revived their old feuds.

with the Bordi and others. They were eventually pacified.

In May the people of Gamo tried unsuccessfully to invade the Kofiso district, and there was much fighting there.

SITUATION
IN THIRD WEEK OF JUNE

12. The position in the third week of June when the Italians resumed their advance westwards from Sugelli and Malka Murri was therefore as follows.

There were large forces commanded by Ras Desta and Dejazmach Gabra Mariam near Wadara and Adola. (1) Further East in the Bale Province there were known to be several detachments that were occasionally raiding over the Juba River into the country between Dolo and Sugelli, and who were also preventing the Italians from moving Northwards along the Webbo Gostro much beyond Labba Shilinti - 50 miles North of Dolo. (2).

13. In Borana there was a small Abyssinian force between Arero and Malka Cuba (3). At Meja there were about one thousand men, and some efforts had been made to fortify the town by digging trenches, etc. There was also a garrison of several hundred soldiers at Yaballo.

But in the other surrounding villages such as Hiddilola, Dalka Noba and Tuka, nothing was being done, and the people seemed to be living in the normal manner as though the war were still far distant. Even at Moyale no preparation had been made beyond the augmenting of the small garrison to about one hundred men.

(1) Dejazmach Makonnen by this time had returned to Alamo with his army to quell the disturbances on the Kembata border.

(2) It is known that Dejazmach Bayonna Warid, the Governor of Bale, Bajirond Pikro Selancib and Fitauraris Atnaf Sugud and Tafari were in command of some bodies of troops there; and there were probably also some of Ras Basibu's men in that area.

(3) Malka Cuba is on the Dawa River, and the Italians had built a bridge there and put a post to guard it.

(B)

THE OCCUPATION 23. On 23rd June Lieut. Colonel Settani left Malka OF MEGA AND
ROYALE Burri with a detachment consisting mainly of dubats augmented by several hundred men of the Gurreh tribe bearing arms. They proceeded on foot with camel transport via Halde, Gill Der, Is, Gof and Edger to Jamakk on the Moga-Royal road and there awaited another force coming from Weyane.
N.B.:

24. On 25th June a column commanded by General Goloso, the newly appointed Governor of the Gallia-Sidamo Province, left Ruggelli for Moga in lorries escorted by tanks and armoured cars. At Moga Dejagmach Dobay and Grazmach Abeba fought in defence of the town for two days, and the Italians were not in occupation until 27th June. It seems that the casualties on neither side were heavy, and that there was no hand to hand fighting, but the Ethiopians at least succeeded in maintaining the defence until all their people had had time to depart westwards with their possessions, so that the Italians entered a completely empty town. It had not been bombed, and the only damage done was by the shells from a few small field guns (1).

25. Two days later, on 29th June, Colonel Zambon left Moga with a detachment in motor lorries to occupy Royal.
He met Colonel Settani with his force from Malka-Burri at Jamakk, and together they advanced on Royal, which was reached soon after 2 p.m.

At Royal there were only about seventy Ethiopian soldiers, and Ato Tekla Ghiorghis, who was in charge, had done practically nothing in preparation for the attack.
Indeed he did not even know of the fall of Moga, for the

.....
(1) The British Consulate had been evacuated on 9th May.
It was subsequently entered by Abyssinian robbers who stole what few things remained.

Practically no damage was done to it by the Italians and General Goloso put a post of soldiers there to guard the ground and buildings.

THE OCCUPATION OF MEGA AND MOYALE (contd) local Boran, though professing still to be loyal to the Ethiopian Government, had treacherously condonned all now of the Italian's movements.

26. Moyale village is situated in undulating open country, and it was not in any way fortified. The only buildings were of mud. To deal with this handful of Abyssinians, armed mostly with very inferior rifles and with little ammunition, Colonel Zambon was given a battalion of Italian machine gunners, two Arab-Somali companies, some engineers, one or two small pieces of artillery, several armoured cars, an aeroplane, and about two or three hundred armed tribal levies - a force of nearly two thousand men.

The Abyssinians were taken completely by surprise and most of them fled to the North West.

27. A good deal of ammunition was expended, and a certain number of bullets came into the British village, but only one British subject, a woman, was hit, and she was not killed. The number of combatants killed and wounded on both sides cannot have exceeded twenty.

On entering the village, machine guns were fired through the mud walls of the houses, in case any one remained inside, and the soldiers then occupied themselves with looting. This was done with the evident consent, and in the presence, of the officers.

28. The worst incident of the expedition took place soon after dark, when some of the Gur-oh levies proceeded to steal cattle, rape, and murder some of the tribesmen, who were living a few hundred yards from the village. Three old men were shot in cold blood, and for several minutes rifles were fired at random. This happened between the Abyssinian and the British villages of Moyale, and only a few hundred yards from the commanding officer's tent; but such was the discipline of the force that, so far as is known, no action was taken about it, either at the time or subsequently.

ADMINISTRATION 20. As soon as Moga and Moyale were occupied, a
ON AREA BEGUN

Resident was appointed to each, and a start was made with the reorganisation of the administration of the area. Patrols were sent to the Abyssinian villages of Tuka, Daicka Roba and Hiddilola, whence all the inhabitants had fled, and small posts of dubatta commanded by native non commissioned officers were put at Cafinduma and so.

The people were called in, and were told of the new era that had started and how they would in future receive many benefits and would not be troubled with taxation. (1)

30. But in fact not much was done. A dressing station was started, but the doctor seems to be more occupied with politics than medicine. A school was opened, but the Boran, though ordered to do so, refused to send their children to it.

Many complaints were made about crimes that had been committed during the past few months by youths armed with Italian rifles, but nothing happened. The Gurreh were allowed to keep the cattle they had looted from the Bogan, and also a large number of camels stolen from the Gabbrá.

31. Orders were given that all rifles in the possession of the tribesmen were to be handed over to the Government within ten days, but no steps seem to have been taken to enforce these orders and it is very doubtful if they were properly obeyed.

The one thing over which some determination actually was shown was the apprehension of the perpetrators of murders of children and travellers - a crime that has .....

(1) They were also shown the might of Italy, and at Moga a tank was driven into and over the Abyssinian mud houses to impress the nice-tiled populace.

ADMINISTRATION always been too common in Borana.
OF AREA BEGUN.

(contd) 32. At this stage the Gur-oh levies began to give trouble. They were not being paid and had not succeeded in getting much loot, and so they refused to function further. Most of them drifted home. The Italians then tried to find Boran to take their places but were not very successful for by now the system of using native levies or irregulars in the way we began, well known, and was not appreciated. Moreover the Boran are not a fighting people.

33. The Ethiopians who had fled from Moyale and the surrounding villages all went to the neighbourhood of Fomo (1) where they remained for a few days while they were collecting their stock and other personal belongings. Letters were sent to them by the Italians calling on them to surrender, but only abusive answers were received. Eventually they all moved off to Gartulli.

34. Probably not more than twenty or thirty Abyssinians had remained behind or returned subsequently to those villages. Middilela, Hubei, and Fakka Roba were completely deserted, and for some time there was no one at all at Fuka (2).

Since they were not prevented from going so, the Boran and others than went and stole the remaining crops from all the abandoned farms.

35. General Galoso had entered Meja on 27th June. Shortly afterwards he occupied Yaballo, where he established his military headquarters, and on 3rd July moved Northwards with a force of several thousand men.

(1) During the battle at Moyale a few Abyssinian men and a certain number of women and children - mainly of the Surji and kindred tribes - had fled to the British village. These were sent back to their homes the following morning.

along the Addis Ababa road. (1)

The Ethiopian forces evacuated Kuku (Agra Mariam) near the Sidamo border on 13th July, and it was occupied by the Italians two days later. They had not succeeded in getting any farther by the end of August.

36. Practically the first 10 miles to open undulating country, which is very suitable for mounted warfare, and the Italians found that there were few aeroplanes to see and armoured cars they could catch easily where they liked, quickly and with very few casualties. But it seems that they had not given adequate consideration to the very different conditions that were found as soon as they left the Borana plains.

37. Yagada Forest near Kuku was the first real obstacle encountered, where they lost three tanks that fell into pits dug by the Abyssinians in the narrow track.

FIGHTING AT JABBA SIRRE

38. About twenty miles North of Kuku there is a big hill called Jabba Sirre, difficult of access and almost surrounded by forests and deep valleys full of dense bush. There was last night their stand.

The Italians soon found that in this country nearly all their machinery was useless to them. The roads were too steep for lorries and armoured cars, while the forests were impracticable for tanks. Aeroplanes could see very little owing to the mountain mists and the dense forests and bush. They tried to use bombs and poison gas but found that as often as not they were injuring

(1) On 29th June and for the six following days the town of Wadara was heavily bombed by Italian aeroplanes. Since no advance was attempted from Wugelli this was evidently intended merely to divert attention and to assist in some way the operations in the Kuku area.

FIGHTING AT JABBA SIRKE (contd) injuring the Jam Jamtu tribesmen instead of the Abyssinian forces. Attempts were made to burn the forests, which protected so well the Abyssinians, but they were not successful (1).

39. The Ethiopians seem here to have adopted true guerilla tactics, and the Italians were often ignorant as to their whereabouts. On several occasions advances were made along different lines and sometimes they got beyond Jabba Sirrd, but were always driven out again. There do not seem to have been many encounters on a large scale, but there can be no doubt that the Italian casualties were heavy and amounted to at least several hundred, including a large number of Europeans. On at least one occasion it was credibly reported that during a retreat the Italians had fired with machine guns into their own troops.

40. Both Ras Desta and Dejazmach Gabra Mariam had anti-aircraft guns, and several Italian aeroplanes were brought down. In the more skilled operations such as this the Ethiopians seem to have used with advantage some of the Tigre soldiers who had been trained in the Italian army, and who had deserted to Ras Desta during the operations in Oddo in the previous January.

41. After trying unsuccessfully to advance for nearly two months, the Italians eventually withdrew their outposts to Kuku and decided to wait.

They hoped that eventually other forces would penetrate into Sidamo from the North and from the East and so make things easier. They considered too that if they waited a little longer the Ethiopians would be getting short of food.

 (1) It is proposed to use aeroplanes very extensively for police work in Ethiopia.

ITALIANS
UNABLE TO
GO FURTHER

42. Meanwhile all efforts were made to embarrass the "rebels" by sending emissaries amongst the tribesmen in the unoccupied territory to encourage them to revolt against the Amhara, and many messages were also sent to the Abyssinians themselves calling on them to surrender.

In anticipation of the fact that when the rains in Sidamo have ended in October a rainy season is beginning in Borana, they collected large stores of all kinds of material, and also got together a lot of horses and camels which they now realise were necessary for any further advance Northwards or Westwards.

43. They also tried hard to recruit more men locally - without much success - and at the end of August reports were received that reinforcements of white troops had arrived and that orders had been given for Somalis to be conscripted in the Bardera area. A large body of men had also been collected in the Mijerton country for service here.

The army in Borana seemed to have become much demoralised and discouraged by the continual defeats in the vicinity of Jabbra Siree. Latterly whenever any Italian soldier crossed the Frontier and felt himself able to speak without fear of eavesdroppers and secret agents, he would tell stories - not of the wonderful successes of the Italian Army of occupation announced by his officers - but of untoward incidents. There were frequent tales of defeats, of aeroplanes shot down by the Abyssinians, and of lorry loads of troops being ambushed and killed. The Italian soldiers spoke too of the vast numbers of Ethiopians in front of them and of the awful difficulties of the country.

They were harassed a good deal by sniping, they said, and by other similar tactics of guerrilla warfare.

ITALIANS

On several occasions it was reported that an attack planned by the Italian staff had had to be abandoned because the men refused to obey orders to advance.

Both at Moga and Moyale the Italian officers seemed to have but a slender control of their men and extreme precautionary measures and false alarms gave an atmosphere of nervousness.

44. It was quite evident that some calculation had been made. Marshal Graziani must have underestimated the difficulties of advancing through the "idame" mountains and he possibly thought that he would be able to send reinforcements from Addis Ababa. The situation elsewhere was evidently such that he could not spare any men.

Both he and General Golonq also probably did not anticipate that this force would suffer so much from battle casualties and sickness, nor did they imagine perhaps that there would be so little enthusiasm on the part of the local tribesmen to enlist (1) or so keen a determination in the Amhara to defend his country.

45. Whatever the reason was, the impression was gained at the end of August that though the Italians here still had plenty of money to spend, they had not nearly enough men to continue with the occupation of further territory. Not only did they need men to fight, but the farther they went the more garrisons were needed, and lines of communication were already pretty long.

46. At the end of August the position was as follows:-

(1) In spite of the high rates of pay, the Somali and Galla tribesmen were usually unwilling to serve because the war seemed to be going badly for the Italians who had by then got the reputation for being reckless with the lives of their native troops.

The Italians were in effective occupation of territory as far West as Fuman Guba. Their Northern limits were Kuku and Nuggelli.

The extent of their penetration into the area North East of the Canale Dorin was uncertain. On the 20th Gestro they seem to have come to a halt a few days' march North of Sabba Shilinti (1) and the Ethiopian forces were apparently still in possession of Jimir and Moyalo, though it had been reported that the Italians were at one time in occupation of the latter town.

IN THE UNOCCUPIED TERRITORY

47. No attempt had been made to penetrate in force into the country west of a line between Yaballo (in the Obda hills) and Eku, but in that area several reconnoitring parties of Italian troops had been severely handled by the Ethiopians who were occasionally raiding villages there and who came even as far as Kuncharro. One small party actually reached the neighbourhood of Middilola (forty miles N.E. of Moyalo) and remained there for a week or so. There were only a few Ethiopians left at Tertulli and these were apparently willing to submit, but in the Burji country (30 miles South West of Eku) there was a fairly large force of hostile Ethiopians, consisting mainly of the people who had fled from the Woda and Moyalo areas. (2).

48. At the end of July there had been a rising in the Konso country, and the Littaurari in charge, together with his Amharic officials, had fled. A raid towards the .....

(1) A big battle in which the Ethiopians were said to have inflicted heavy losses on the Italians was reported to have taken place at Kil Met, in that neighbourhood, during May.

(2) West of Tertulli as far as the Omo River the tribes were apparently still unaffected by the war and the only incidents reported from them were one or two of the usual small fights between the Golubba and Hamar people.

end of August there was another rising of Konso and Purji, but by this time more Ethiopian troops had come from the North into the Konso country, and it is reported that the rebellion was rigorously quelled.

49. North West of Kuku the Guji tribe similarly revolted against the Amhara Government in July, soon after the Italian occupation of Kuku, but they were also suppressed and driven south west to the Purji border, where they remained.

50. In Sidamo there was reported to be a large Ethiopian army still sufficiently well organised and adequately supplied with food and ammunition. In the territory immediately north of Kuku, most of the troops seemed to be Ras Desta's men, though it is probable that the officer to whom credit is due for the successes the Ethiopians have had there is not Ras Desta but a certain Nagndraas Sahale (1). Some of the units of this force were being moved Northwards apparently in anticipation of an attack being made by an Italian column from Adisie, Ababa.

Further East near Adola there was Dejazmach Gabra Mariam with his army, watching the Italians at Buggelli though the garrison there and at Arero showed no signs of activity and there was in fact little likelihood, owing to the mountainous nature of the country, of an advance from that direction.

51. Who, if any, of the many Ethiopian officers of high rank reported to be in Sidamo was in supreme command could not be discovered, but there was evidently some kind of understanding and cohesion amongst them, and the

(1) Ras Desta himself was known to have been at Andara in the middle of June, but when the Italians occupied Kuku he had moved to Adola. Since then he is reported to have gone farther West - presumably to defend Ifra Alem.

Italians were clearly not unimpressed at the size and seeming solidarity of the force in front of them.

52. In the occupied territory of Borana little of any consequence was happening. The tribes were living fairly peacefully and they had little to complain of, except perhaps the impressment of a certain number of their cattle and horses, the ordinary small extortions of the soldiers, and occasional offenses against women. Some tribesmen had grievances about raids, stock thefts, and murders that happened prior to the arrival of the Italian main body which the officials would not deal with.

In the towns there were very few civilians, for practically all of the Abyssinians had fled. The traitor Fitaurari Adome Aboya was at Mogn and was used mainly to sign letters sent to the "rebels" calling upon them to surrender. These invariably produced rude answers. Another minor official, Balanbaras Aboya, had surrendered with eight of his men at Yaballo; but submissions had been very rare, and General Deleno had not even the satisfaction of freeing the slaves because they had nearly all gone with their masters.

53. The Commissario at Mogn, Colonel Settani, was in charge of an area extending from Malka Murri on the Dawa River to Lake Stefano, and he had divided this up into districts with headquarters at Moga, Yaballo, Moyale, Huggeli and Aroro.

North of the Dawa River and East of Malka Murri the administration was being controlled from Mogadiscio (the Oddo district is excluded from the Galla - Sidamo Province) and the Residente's headquarters were at Pakol Murrya. There was a big post at Saddali (opposite Famu) on the Dawa River, and there were also smaller posts at nearly all the "malkas" or crossing places on the river between Mandera and Malka Murri.

POSITION
AUGUST
(contd.)
IN THE UNOCCUPIED
TERRITORY

54. Malla Murri was apparently still being used as a dump, and although there was no properly cleared road between there and Moyale, lorries were sent backwards and forwards via i.e. But latterly, owing to the difficulty of using the road on the river bank when the Laau was in flood the tendency seemed to be to neglect Malla Murri and the work bridge that was begun there, and to concentrate on a diversion at Saddoh going towards Ruggeli.

55. The tribes who have always lived astride the Frontier had remained more or less in their accustomed places, and were clearly waiting on the fence awaiting developments.

For cattle owners there are no attractions on the Kenya side, and it was formerly only the bad administration of the Abyssinians that had kept them out of territory where the water and grazing is very much better. Their concern now is to decide whether the new Italian administration will eventually be so much better than that of the Abyssinians that it is worth while crossing over.

56. At Gaddadum and near Sololo a certain number of Adjuran, Sakuye and Boran cattle people did actually go, and will probably now stay in Ethiopia. Many camel owners also moved north to the Gaddadum area, but it is unlikely that they intend to remain there since it is too cold for camels at certain times of the year, whereas most of the Northern Frontier of Kenya is good camel country.

57. At the outset the Boran and Suriyah seemed to be glad at the coming of the Italians. The Degolai were much more reserved and disinclined to enlist or to help them, and a certain number seem even to have gone into Kenya, fearing the possible consequences of the Italian occupation.

58. In all the tribes there are many individuals who have profited exceedingly by the war and the high prices paid for live-stock, and the traders of Moyale and Mandera have also benefited considerably. The latter now realise that it is not the intention of the Italian Government to encourage, or even to tolerate, the spending of Italian money in British territory, but nevertheless they are confident that since they can sell things so much cheaper than the merchants in Italian territory (1) a good deal of trade is certain to continue for some time to come.

59. There have been on the whole very few serious frontier incidents. The Italians having agreed temporarily to accept the boundary line and the arrangements concerning watering and grazing that had been observed in former times by the Ethiopian Government.

60. On occasions their troops have violated the British Frontier - notably at Gondad Guda, East of Gaddadura and at Tulitu East of Moyale ; and several times had they protested formally about the presence of British military or police posts near the Frontier at such places as Harbor, Gurar, and Sololo. It is likely that this was due as much to ignorance of the country as anything else (for their maps are very inadequate and inaccurate); but bearing in mind the fact that it is old established Italian colonial policy to refuse trans-frontier watering and grazing facilities to neighbouring nomadic tribes and to entice as many people as possible into their own territory, it is not anticipated that in the future the situation on this frontier, where nearly all the wells are on the Ethiopian side of the boundary, will necessarily remain either easy or satisfactory.

Notes concerning the Norwegian and Swedish Red Cross units.

Members of the Norwegian and Swedish Ambulancees, (in charge of Drs. Uland and Rylander respectively) and Mr. A. L. Smith of the Sudan Interior Mission arrived at Lukana on the Kenya Northern Frontier on 6th August, 1938.

The Swedish unit had come from the Bale province and the Norwegian had been in the Hadara-Adola area. They had met south of Irga Alew.

They reported that they had received instructions to return (sent by the Ethiopian Red Cross Headquarters at Addis Ababa and dropped from an Italian aeroplane) on 22nd May. Dr. Uland had also had a message from the British Consul at Moyale on 18th June when he was near Agord Salam but had been unable to answer it.

Their journey southwards via Burji, Badessa, Tortulli, and Lug Ballal, on which they were escorted by some of Ras Desta's soldiers, had been comparatively uneventful.

They stated that the town of Irga Alew was being controlled by Tigre deserters from the Italian army who had on 15th June arrested and imprisoned two Belgian coffee farmers from Wando named M. Bles and M. Colaris.

The Greek, Savas Karayasilis, who was used by Ras Desta as a factotum, and who was at one time in command of a column of his army on the Deua River, was also imprisoned there on a charge of communicating information to the Italians.

The following Europeans were, they thought, still at the places mentioned:-

At Irga Alew.

Messrs Saak, Cricar, Athanas, Dimitri, Tahayoti, Costa, Bern, Nahon, Pannyceti, Costa, Manolfi, Alexander, Costa Manoli, (all Greeks or Armenian).

At Wando.

M. Thomol (French) M. Kim & wife (German) M. Rixot's wife (Belgian).

South of Irga Alew.

Pere Imbois (French) M. Bartolani (Hungarian).

At Roffnac.

Abbo Salaman (French).

They had no news of the Boran High Priest Pitaurari Gado Jilo nor of Pitaurari Guyo Anna, or the other Boran chiefs and priests who had been arrested by Ras Desta when their people began to show signs of disloyalty, though it had generally been supposed that they were in detention at Irga Alem.

Mr Allen Smith, in contradiction to the propaganda published by the Italians concerning the atrocities committed by Ras Desta and his army, stated that on one occasion when one of Ras Desta's men cut off the hand of a prisoner he was put in chains and treated with great disfavour by the Ras. Mr Smith had heard of no other atrocities.

APPENDIX.

Notes on Italian methods of warfare and administration employed near the Kenya Frontier. (1)

HAIKU
TROOPS
FRONT.

Native troops were apparently always sent in front when operations were in progress. (2)

On the other hand in the posts white troops are often used for manual labour which native troops decline to do.

The Italian army never succeed in getting native's to do work as hard as they do.

A great reliance is put on armoured cars, tanks and aeroplanes, without which the troops seem reluctant to advance. But in the semi-tropical country of Sidamo military does not seem to have justified expectation.

USE OF POISON
GAS.

3. Bombs containing poison gas or corrosive fumigants have been dropped from aeroplanes on several occasions.

On March 19th when it was known that a British missionary (Dr. Allen Smith) witnessed the injuries sustained by about fifty people from some corrosive chemical said to be mustard gas.

On 2nd April, and a week later on 9th April a bomb was dropped, where were a great number of casualties from the same cause. Dr. Wilson of the Army has not been dealt with these cases, and photographed most of them.

(1) In compiling these notes due consideration has been given to the difficulties involved in this war and to the fact that it is still early in the day to judge or to express opinions on Italian achievements and capabilities. But it can be remembered without injustice definitely had planned this campaign for a long time; that she has used in it large numbers of men and expended enormous sums of money; and that none of the things on which content is now made have also been observed for a number of years in Soaliland.

(2) On a number of occasions it has been noted that a favourite device is to send forward a small detachment of irregular Qubas (or preferably tribal levies) in the hope that they will draw the fire of the Asi tribes and when they retreat will bring their pursuers within range of machine guns manned by regulars or European troops.

DISCIPLINE
IRREGULARS.

5. The training and discipline of the Irregulars 'Dubata' who preponderate and who are mainly natives of Somaliland (Hijertein, Hawin, Mohamed Zubeir, Shebelle Rahanwein etc.) is not good. In spite of very high pay (1) and adequate rations, there is much discontent and insubordination. There is also a good deal of sickness owing to the cold and the high altitude which the Somalis cannot stand.

6. It seems that many of these men are conscripted. Some tribes like the Hawia are generally fairly willing, but the spirit of the Hijertoin has been bad throughout the campaign, for they still remember and resent the incidents of some twelve years ago, when their own territory was occupied and they themselves were treated with considerable violence by the Italian Government.

7. One of the most noteworthy things in this area has been the manner in which the Italians have made use of the tribes through whose territory they are passing.

It is realized that the employment of tribal levies is not a new idea, but on this occasion it has seemingly been done with an exceptional lack of prudence and disregard for the future.

8. Mention has already been made in this report of the distribution at Huggeli and Malma Burri of rifles to young men of the Gurreh, Boran and Dogodia tribes, and the results thereof.

On arrival at Moyale and Moga, the Gurreh refused to do anything more, partly because they had reached the limits of the country they knew, and partly because

(1) The pay of an ordinary soldier is at least 250 Lira a month, or nearly as much as that of a native Sergeant Major in the King's African Rifles or the Kenya Police.

TRIBAL

they were not making sufficient profit. It should be recorded that those tribal levies were never paid, but it was apparently understood that they should make what they could by looting. During the operations at Moyale, several hundred of the Gurreh were fed on cattle that had been raided by them from the Boran, and subsequently in reward for services rendered, they have been allowed by the Italian officials to retain a large number of camels which they stole from the Gabra tribe during the campaign.

9. When the Gurreh failed them, the Italians turned again to the Boran, and issued rifles to them. In this case it appears that, although the recipients were utterly untrained and undisciplined, they were at least enlisted and controlled after a fashion.

DISARMAMENT

10. The Italians are not, it appears, quite unconscious of the dangers of the scheme, for as soon as they have utilised each tribe undoccupied their territory, orders are given for all rifles in the possession of the people to be surrendered.

These orders have already been given to the Aulihan, Dogodia, Gurreh, and Boran, but although a certain number of firearms have been handed over in response to the order, there can be little doubt that many of them (though they may be hidden) remain at the disposal of the tribesmen.

11. However, the Italian authorities seem to be satisfied that these people are in fact disarmed, for they proceeded to re-issue to most of the tribes a number of Government rifles. These are nominally for their own protection, but are probably intended also to be used (together with their registered recipients) on Government service when occasion arises.

It is likely therefore that the net result of this procedure has been simply that some of the worst rifles in the tribesmen's possession have been exchanged for good Italian ones, and that each tribe is still inadequately equipped to carry on with its feuds and raids as heretofore.

DISTURBMENT

CHARACTERISTICS OF OFFICERS. 12. The standard of competence shown by officers is not on the whole a high one. As would be expected, they are nearly all soldiers, and seem to understand very little about native administration.

They appear not to realise the capacity of the Gallin and Somali for prevarication, exaggeration, and sheer mendacity; and the word of a native soldier, whether in connection with a complaint by the tribesmen, or concerning news of happenings elsewhere, is usually accepted as sufficient.

13. Perhaps their worst fault, to which most objection is taken by the natives, is their refusal as a general rule to hear minor complaints. While the tendency among the commissioned ranks seems to be not to decentralise - every small matter being referred to higher authority - the Resident in charge of a district tries to leave as much as possible of the actual administration and the judicial affairs of the tribesmen to 'Alids' (native Sergeants), Wakils and mesles Cadis.

14. The white officials do not generally seem to be well adapted to lonely posts in this climate, and they are criticised by the natives for being impatient and quick tempered.

Their attitude towards native women is not the same as ours; nor is their point of view on the subject of pourboires, and the participation of officials in local commercial transaction.

Their methods of dealing with official matters are likewise somewhat oriental, and their great aim

CHARACTERISTICS

(as a 'Times' correspondent recently explained) is evidently to be 'furbos' or crafty. For example a personal interview or a verbal message conveyed by an emissary is preferred to the written word; and letters are suitably evasive.

It is noticeable and is indeed commented on by the tribesmen, that orders are frequently changed and while they sometimes remain unenforced, occasionally rigorous action is suddenly taken without warning. Native chiefs are not usually consulted about administration measures.

The result of this system is to create an atmosphere of uncertainty and uneasiness, which does not contribute to the wellbeing of the people.

15. At this early stage it would perhaps be unfair to expect there to be a very good subordinate administrative staff, but one cannot fail to observe that at present a number of the non commissioned officers and headmen are natives, not of good character, who have been discharged from some inferior position in the Kenya services, while the advisers and agents of the various officials are frequently the better known scoundrels of the neighbourhood.

16. When territory has been occupied, the Italians seem always to adopt the bad system of controlling the tribesmen with posts of native soldiers commanded by native non commissioned officers. These men are usually untrained and undisciplined; apparently no trouble is taken to select them according to character or tribes; and they are never given rations. The posts are very seldom visited by a white officer, and the word of the native non commissioned officer is accepted in all disputes without question by the Italian officer in charge of the district.

ADMINISTRATION

This system leads to much corruption and injustice to the tribesmen, and also to frontier disputes.

DESTRUCTION
ADMINISTRATIVE STRUCTURE AND DISREGARD OF
TRIBAL AREAS

17. Reference has been made in the newspapers Il Giornale d'Italia and Resto del Carlino to the necessity for the destruction "from top to bottom" of the whole rudimentary structure, political and administrative, of the old Abyssinian Empire", and for "the destruction of the old social system of Ethiopia".

A beginning of this process seems to have been made in this area by disregarding the entity of the nomadic tribes. It is frequently announced that all of the country now being Italian, the tribesmen may to a large extent go where they wish.

18. This would appear to be a policy of doubtful value in this part of Ethiopia and the results of the inevitable invasion of what little is left of the Boran tribal lands by Somalis, and of the ensuing strife between the different tribes, are being awaited with interest - if not some small anxiety for the peace of the Kenya Frontier.

19. Il Resto del Carlino went further and stated that there was no intention of using "the methods of the English" and exploiting one race or religion against another.

It is apparent that though Italy has for long past posed as a friend of Islam and a supporter of the Moslem tribes, she has not in fact given any indication yet that she intends to treat with equal consideration other native tribes, like the Boran, with their own religions.

But it is clear that as much as possible is being done to foster in the Somali and Oromo people a hatred of the Amhara. For example in the Negra market place a local native was recently applauded by Italian officers for hitting - quite gratuitously - an inoffending Abyssinian officer in the face.

20. Moreover the indiscriminate use of tribal levies - a practice regarded in recent times as of doubtful wisdom in our own Colonies - against large forces consisting of the Amharic inhabitants of the area (as opposed to bands of outlaws) can scarcely be described as anything but the exploiting of one race and religion against another.

21. In adopting this attitude towards the Abyssinians, the Italians seem to be short sighted. Having embittered the Amhara unnecessarily by such actions as the bombing of villages, when there was no good reason for doing so nor purpose served thereby, he is not likely subsequently to be an easily controlled or loyal Italian subject, for he does not, like the African negro, soon forget and ignore what has happened in the past.

22. And in reality little safety lies in the balance of power derived from the supposed hatred for the Amhara oppressor felt by all the subordinate tribes.

It is known to all dwellers in this country that consistent and permanent loyalty to a flag or to a Government, as it is understood in Europe, is an idea that is quite incomprehensible to the Somali and Galli. They will undertake most things for money, and are capable of making acts of subversion and of ballyhooing suitably phrased loyal addresses to the officials of any Government that happens to be in control for the time being of land that they want to use for the sustenance of their animals and children.

THE LOYALTY

AND SOMALE
AN ASSET OF

It seems that a critical time may come when the Italians have scattered their resources throughout the country and can no longer afford to do everything in the present extravagant style, and to pay such large sums of money for wages and bribes.

The Somali soldiers (many of them conscripted) will eventually discover the true loyalties of their tribesmen, and the Galla people - perhaps deprived of a good deal of their land - may begin to wonder whether the last state is really better than the first. The cruelties of their former masters will be forgotten, and it may be felt that while ~~the~~ Amhara at his worst did usually listen to complaints and grievances, and sometimes tempered justice with mercy; at his best he understood the mentality of the people in a way that very few white men can do. (1).

CONSERVATION
COLLECTION
POPULATION

23. As has always been the case on the Jubaland Frontier, all possible steps are taken to prevent tribesmen from leaving Ethiopia and efforts are also made to encourage others to come to, and to remain in, Italian territory to swell the population. (2).

MONEY MAY NOT LEAVE THE
COUNTRY, AND
ONLY ITALIAN PRODUCTS ARE WANTED

24. Here, as in Italy, the policy is to prevent money from leaving the country, and to do everything possible to discourage imports of foreign goods that compete with Italian products.

.....
(1) The future attitude of the people towards the Italians and the former Ethiopian Government is of greater importance here than elsewhere, because it is intended to garrison this area almost entirely with native troops - most of whom will most likely, owing to the nature of the country, be locally enlisted men and many of them only partially trained irregular "dubata".

(2) The methods adopted to prevent tribesmen from crossing the Frontier is to put out posts of dubata who patrol the boundary and sometimes even a few men in each village. People are encouraged to immigrate by promises of freedom from taxation and by making it easier for them to get water for their stock if they are Italian subjects.

Many British merchants who went to Italian Somaliland to sell livestock were forced to hand over their Italian currency and to accept in its place in the local Post Office Savings Bank.

INTELLIGENCE

25. The Italians, in accordance with their usual custom, employ here many spies and agents, and take great pains over the collection of news; but they seem usually to employ unreliable persons, and to be unskillful in sifting the very small grains of truth from the immense amount of inaccurate, exaggerated, or utterly false news that is always current in this country.

THE ATMOSPHERE
OF ITALY
INTRODUCED

SILENCE AND SECRETLY

26. No time has been lost in introducing the atmosphere of Italy. Natives dare not now discuss anything appertaining to the affairs of the Government within earshot of any one else. Secret agents are largely employed in the towns and spies sent out amongst the tribesmen; propaganda is disseminated, and Government servants are told in no uncertain manner that they may not disclose, in writing or by word of mouth, news of any untoward incidents, or of casualty.

ROADS,
TRANSPORT
BUILDINGS

27. Less work on roads has been done here than in other parts of Ethiopia that have been occupied by the Italians. Gangs of white labourers are engaged in metalling the main road from Dolo to Huggelli via Piltu, and others are making an alternative route to Huggelli via Saddoh on the Dawa River. But west of the Dawa nothing has as yet been done, and the old tracks are still being used.

Nevertheless the Italian transport service seems to be efficiently organised - seemingly regardless of cost - and the troops are seldom if ever short of rations.

ROADS,
TRANSPORT
(contd)

NATIVE
WOMEN

A good deal of building material is being brought from Mogadisso and a start has already been made on buildings and protective walls of stone in most of the larger ports.

28. On many occasions in Somaliland in the past the Italian has learnt that Hamitic people in this part of Africa will not tolerate the conscription of their women, and in Borana it has not yet been attempted.

There are always a certain number of incidents connected with women that cause scandal amongst the tribesmen and townfolk, but on the whole there has been far less trouble than might have been expected.

It is clearly quite ridiculous at the present time, when no white women are here, for the Italian Government and the newspapers to exhort the army against "contamination" with the conquered race, and the prevalence of venereal disease throughout the country is certain ultimately to have a serious effect on the white Italians.

29. In former times there existed on this Frontier a definite fear of the Abyssinian, who was generally regarded as a self-seeking ruler, caring little for anything that was not connected with his own profit.

The nomadic people still do think that possibly the departure of the Ethiopian officials may be to their advantage, though they remain uncertain as to the real nature of the Italians, who arouse suspicion in the natives mind by promising an eldorado.

But there is no doubt that a very definite change has come over the point of view of the more sophisticated people in the towns.

With them the issue now quite clearly is white versus black. Whatever hatred there may have been of

COLOUR

COLOUR

the Christian Abyssinian is forgotten, and news of the war is eagerly sought - always in the hope that there may be indications of the coming defeat of the Italians.

Probably the harsh manner in which British tredears are treated in Italian territory has contributed to the fear and dislike felt for the Italians by Arab Somalis and Indian merchants ; but the main reason for the hope that the Ethiopians will eventually get the better of them is undoubtedly the feeling that a nation of white people, supported by others, (including the British), has behaved unfairly and brutally towards a black race for no valid reason; and that their action constitutes a menace to other coloured races.

30. The people in the towns continually discuss the many local prophecies predicting the ultimate recovery by the Ethiopians of their own country, and the alleged assistance being given them by the Turks, and the extraordinary things that have happened at Sheikh Hussein's village North of Gimir, and so on. (one Italian airman who ventured over Sheikh Hussein's village came back blind !)

The general trend of these rumours is to show that God is on the side of the Ethiopians, and is helping them in the same way that the Mad Mullah was supposed to have been helped. A certain number of stories - for example one concerning the burial of white Italian soldiers in consecrated ground, while the corpses of native soldiers are left out for hyenas - are obviously repeated with an underlying feeling of colour-consciousness.

31. Though there is much that may be criticised in connection with Italian methods of warfare, 'pacification' and administration, the fact remains that at the present time, at any rate they do evidently desire,

ITALIAN
DESIRE FOR PEACE
ON THE
KENYA

and intend to try, to keep the peace on the Kenya Frontier. They have already made it clear that they are doing all they can to stop tribal raids and murders and to prevent friction being caused by soldiers.

But they have not an easy task. It is one thing for Signor Gayda to write that "Italian occupation will henceforth preserve the frontier of Kenya and its peace in the interior.....and in that way Italy will reward the help that Kenya now supplies to the Abyssinian raiders" (1). It is another to achieve it.

What matters most at the moment to Italy's neighbours is not what she may perhaps intend to do, but what she is capable of doing in such very difficult circumstances, and what will in fact happen.
