It is pretty evident that this dispatch was intended to be a dispatch relating to field operations and to be submitted to the Inter-Departmental Council on Military Rewards. The officer who commended evidently intended his communication to be of this nature, though they are not exactly the report briefly describing the operations which the Regulations prescribe. The Col. however, assumed that he did mean this despatch for the Rewards issue (if he didn't, he might not have sent the O.C.'s reports in it), and made nearly every mistake possible.

Reg. 170 of the R.A.R. Regulations says that the Col., in forwarding the report of the O.C., will write a covering despatch giving his opinion on the operations and his recommendations. Such despatches should be headed "Despatch relating to Field Operations". In the absence of this heading a despatch will be regarded as sent for information and not as a recommendation for rewards.

Reg. 171 says that such despatches should not contain reference to previous correspondence. This is very necessary, as such despatches are intended to be published.

Colonel Mackay recommends for individual reward the usual enormous percentage of white men engaged. But the Govt does not so much as refer to a single one of these recommending. Nor does he state his opinion, indispensable for the purposes of the Rewards Council, whether the operations were worthy of a medal.

As for the actual merit of the operations they certainly attained their object in a very short time and with no loss to Govt either of life or money from a political point of view they were a great success. But in undecisive and dangerous they fell very far short of the standard which the Rewards Council has set up for the publication of despatches on the part of a medal. This is not a reason for refusing to refer the despatch to the Council, but for damping down in advance extravagant hopes conceived by those who took part in the operations.

I think the best course would be to tell the Govt that his despatch has been overlooked, & that it is not understood clearly whether it is intended to be pointing out the respects in which it violates the rules laid down for the

1. The main facts of the case are as follows
2. The Kisiil people, to the estimated number of between 10,000 and 20,000, occupy a tract of about some 200 square miles in extent in the Kisumu Province, surrounded on the four sides by Nilotu, Kavirondo, Masa, Lamoua and a forest belt respectively.

The district lies at an elevation of about 5,000 feet, is densely cultivated, fertile and well watered, bare of forest and free from tsetse.

Like all other African tribes, the Kisiil had frequent feuds with their weaker neighbours, notably with the Kavirondo, whose country they frequently raided for cattle; being the stronger tribe, they were invariably successful and gained a high but cheaply won reputation for truculence and warlike spirit. The largest and strongest of the clans into which the tribe is divided is that of the Kitutu, who have always been the most persistent raiders.

ds para:3, Appendix
Report of O.C.
R.F. Gov/15165

In 1905 a small force under Capt (now Major) Jenkins visited and punished certain Kisiil clans (other than the Kitutu) for raids on their neighbours.

There appears to have been no further communication between the Kisiil and the Administration until 1907 and the early part of 1908, when the Kisiil station was opened.

The actual selection of the site was left to a junior officer, Mr. Northcote, who fixed at the southern end of the territory of the Kitutu, the most truculent and powerful of the Kisiil clans, whom moreover had not been one of those united by Capt. Jenkins three years previously:

17

The new station was not inspected by any of the senior officers of the Province, and Mr. Northcote had with him a force of 62 civil Police but no regular troops.

Beyond the statement by Mr. Ainsworth that "it would appear that the Kitutu, either intentionally or through some error of interpretation" on enquiring the reason of Mr. Northcote's advent, were told that inasmuch as there was a famine in Kavirondo,
"Mr. Northcote had come to Kisii for a time where there was plenty of food", there is nothing to show that Government took a single step to get into touch with the Kisii or to acquaint them beforehand with its intention to occupy their country permanently, or with the object which it had in view in so doing.

5. Mr. Ainsworth writes, "the Kitutu, from the start, became suspicious of our intentions" and
"made no secret of their dislike to our locating ourselves among them. . . . They were extremely ignorant and isolated. . . . These people (the Kisii) were not in a position to know of the Government, its power and resources; in fact they appear to have had no idea at all of the existence of any authority apart from what they understood existed at Kisii station itself."

"In a few words, it is evident that the Kitutu did not want a station near them. They resented the White man intruding amongst them. . . .
It was believed further," adds Mr. Ainsworth,
"that the occupation of Kisii was simply a personal matter and would cease for ever with the death of Mr. Northcote."

It is not surprising therefore, under the

by the local witch-doctor, should have led eventually to the attack on Mr. Horne's and other intruders (Police and traders) which brought about the punitive expedition described in these despatches.

I will deal first with the events antecedent to the commencement of operations.

It is not stated whether the decision to establish a Government station in Kisi had been arrived at with the Government's approval after consultation with the senior administrative officer in charge of the province. This is a very important point and that Sir. J.S. Sadler should be asked for information for on it depends largely the degree of his responsibility for what followed.

The establishment of a new station in a totally unknown district such as that in question, inhabited by a large population of raiding savages who had no previous knowledge even of the existence of the Whiteman's Government and power was a matter requiring serious consideration. In Northern Nigeria, where until recently there were large pagan districts which had not been brought under effective administrative control, a District Officer might at best even tour, much less establish a Government station, in an unexplored district without the express sanction of the Government.

(Vide Memo: No. 7, para: 11 in Sir F. Lugard's Memoranda for Political Officers, 1907.)

In a new Protectorate where the extension of Government control over remote tribes is necessarily slow, the risks and responsibilities attaching to the process of effective occupation have to be estimated in advance as accurately as the information at the disposal of the Executive will allow.

Assuming that the Administration had decided to make a forward move, it is clear that unless a small staff sufficient to deal with the district to be absorbed was available, and that this staff had to find it and on the spot such military support as was deemed necessary after careful enquiry in view of local political conditions and of the emergencies which might be likely to arise during the early stages of occupation, the decision would be premature and therefore bad policy.

Continuity of Administration and of the effect produced upon savage tribes by Europeans with whom they have had no previous acquaintance is the first and most important essential.

For this reason it is never advisable that the task of making known and building up the authority of Government under such circumstances should be entrusted to a single European.

In the present instance, however, this elementary principle of African Administration was disregarded. A single officer was allowed to penetrate into the centre of an unexplored district, several days march from the nearest Government post, and established a station in the territory of the most powerful and truculent of the local tribes.

9. To give a true idea of what such a step means necessary to quote Mr. Ainsworth. "I consider it a great mistake to leave any of these outstations with only one officer in charge. It is not fair to the officer concerned. It is against the interests of the Administration, it is offering dangers that should not be offered, and such a system is responsible in a certain degree for many wrong impressions gained by the natives. It might be said that such a system is unfair to the European and native civil superintenders for in the event of the disablement or death of the solitary European, the chances of their offering a successful resistance to a general attack on the station would be very small.

10. As regards effective military support, Mr. Northcote had none. He had, on the contrary, 62 Civil Police; that is to say, men who have been (1908) reported as being useless for military purposes and inefficient as ~~auxiliary~~ ^{civil} Police. The opinion of the Officer Commanding the Kisumu expedition was, that the state of the Police (who included these 62) was "deplorable"; as instances of this it may be noted that one Police escort mutinied and shot one of the ~~our~~ Non-Commissioned Officers, and that one of their officers, Mr. Foran, D.S.P., wrote to the Officer Commanding Troops, "I do not trust the Police and I feel obliged to protest against being left with such an incompetent and untrustworthy body of men."

It is with such men as these to support him and enforce the authority of Government that the Administration allowed a solitary civilian to embark on the task of extending its control over a remote and unknown district populated by some 50,000 savages, and I look upon the proceeding as one of criminal folly.

It is noteworthy that the Governor makes no reference whatever to the portion of Mr. Northcote's report above quoted, which is, in effect, a severe condemnation of the policy of Government on that occasion.

11. I was under the impression that Mr. Ainsworth himself was ~~Provincial Commissioner~~ ^{Provincial Commissioner} of the Kisumu district; but if this were so, it is inconceivable that he would so readily condemn this way the administrative methods for which he himself was properly responsible.

In the Report of the Officer Commanding Troops, however, reference is made to the fact that the Provincial Commissioner had only been in the district for 2 months and knew nothing about the Kisii, and it may therefore have been another, and not Mr. Ainsworth, who was in immediate executive charge of the Province. This point should be cleared up.

12. It is nowhere stated in these papers who was primarily responsible for the forward movement in Kisii.

Mr. Northcote could hardly have taken such an important step without authority and the District Commissioner immediately above him must assuredly have been cognizant of it. Whether the Provincial Commissioner at the time had authorized it or not, it is impossible to say, and the Government should be asked for information on the point.

13. A more important question, as far as Sir. J. Sadler is concerned, is whether he was aware of and had approved the proposal to establish ~~at~~ the station which was to be the first step towards occupation and effective control of the Kisii territory; and, secondly, if so, whether he approved of the task being assigned to one Assistant District Commissioner supported by 62 civil Police.

It looks to me very much as if the move was undertaken by the local executive either with the knowledge of the Governor and his advisers or else without their being made fully acquainted with local conditions. It is essential that this should be ascertained.

If the Governor was fully aware and authorized the move, he was guilty of carelessness and incompetence in that he failed to see that proper methods were adopted in order to safeguard Government interests, for no Administrator worthy of the name would authorize such an important ~~extension~~ extension of Government responsibility as that involved by the occupation of a large tract of unknown and turbulent hill-country being entrusted to a solitary and comparatively inexperienced junior officer and a handful of civil police admittedly of no military value.

14. If, on the other hand, this step was taken by subordinate executive officers on their own initiative, the responsibility, though they share it with him, still falls upon the Governor inasmuch as he was content to put up with a system of administration under which the executive staff were so loosely controlled and so destitute of a sense of responsibility that it was possible for one or some of them to cast a few and heavy responsibility on the Government without its knowledge or authority, and by so doing to involve the Protectorate in military operations, resulting in the loss of hundreds of lives, which in my opinion need not necessarily have occurred.

Close and unremitting control by the Executive over its outlying staff is the first requisite for the successful administration of an African Protectorate, above all during the extension of its authority over unsubdued native tribes. How strict this control can be may be seen on reference to Sir F. Lugard's Memoranda for Political Officers, and I can personally vouch for the fact that in its absence the effective occupation of Northern Nigeria would have been infinitely more costly in lives and money.

The process of absorbing fresh territory demands tact, patience and foresight, and the services of the most experienced district officers, for while Government through its Officers is slowly building up first impressions of its aim and power in the minds of savages, who are necessarily ignorant and distrustful, a very slight mistake due to hasty temper or ignorance of their language or customs may lead to disaster.

16. The value of first impressions in the minds of the native cannot be overestimated; if they are unfavourable, trouble is bound to ensue, and with it the necessity for military operations, and all that they imply.

A tropical Administration consequently needs its ablest servants in the work of getting into touch with savage races in the most effective and at the same time cheapest manner, and my experience has been that the lower and more savage the native the higher the type of European required to deal with him effectually on these lines. The remoter his standards and ideas are from ours, the greater the imagination and insight required to divine and amend them.

17. In the case under review, the most delicate of the tasks imposed on a tropical Administration was placed in the hands of a very junior officer, and it was rendered difficult at the very outset by an error either of judgement or knowledge, for as Mr. Ainsworth says, (vide para: 4, above) "Mr. Northcote was told either unintentionally or through some error of interpretation" that Mr. Northcote had come to their country for a time only.

[Note. The consequences of Mr. Northcote's lack of experience are stated by the Governor in para: 3 of his despatch in 1892, where he says that although Mr. Northcote was apparently aware of the considerable degree of unrest that had existed amongst the Kikuyu for some time past, "he does not appear to have attached the importance he should to the signs that should have been evident."

The result of Mr. Northcote's failure to read one situation aright was that the Governor was informed that there was no necessity for garrisoning Kisii station with a company of the Kings African Rifles which was prepared to do so in consequence of a outbreak of the Kisii crisis. In 1907 had this step been taken, it is more than probable that this outbreak and visible sign of the Government's power would have prevented the rising which subsequently occurred.

18. The exact opposite was the case, and having once entered their country, to remain there, Mr. Northcote should have made it clear to the Kisii, before doing anything else, that he, and through him the Government, had come to stay and meant to do so.

One result of this error was that the Kitatu took steps to hasten the end of what they believed to be in any case only a temporary and unwelcome visitation, by attempting Mr. Northcote's life. With an experienced officer such an error would not have been allowed to occur. The whole of the neighbouring chiefs and as many tribesmen as possible would have been invited to a friendly durbar at which the existence and intentions of Government would have been explained to them. That is the ordinary practice. If this was impracticable the methods referred to in para 23 would have been adopted.

19. Mr. Northcote was evidently ignorant of their language and therefore unable to check his interpreter. If Government intended to effect a peaceable occupation of the Kisii district, it does not appear to me unreasonable to demand that it should have required the officer detailed for this duty to pass the Lower Standard in Kisii before settling permanently in the district. An elementary knowledge of a language sufficient to check simple translations or statements made by an interpreter, can usually be acquired in a few months. Considering how much depends under such circumstances upon accurate translation, and the avoidance of misunderstandings, it is not surprising that the establishment of a school of Kisii is a matter of some importance.

tion in a new district, where, as in this case, was not a question of immediate progress, might well be deferred until the officer posted to it had obtained an elementary knowledge of its dialect through friendly border natives.

20. I have already stated that Mr. Northcote was unsupported by any force, ^{or} ~~name~~ of the name (para 10) and this aspect of the question requires attention.

Among savage tribes such as the Kiall our authority at the outset is ^{unusually} based to a large extent upon our visible superior armed strength for they recognize ^{materially} only the rule of the strongest. It is a matter of months and years before savages come to recognize the moral and intellectual superiority of the ruling race, but the sight of ^{armed} and superior resources in ^{the hands of a small number} disciplined men appeals to them at once. There has consequently been a tendency to go a step further and to use our strength unnecessarily. To quote Sir. P. Glouard, "officers" are often led to consider the subjects of His Majesty as ^{enemies} brought under civilizing agencies as common enemies and therefore to treat them as such.

29574307
Nort: Nigeria.

21. Our aim should rather be to obtain effective control with as little use of force as possible. I do not hesitate to say that a parade of strength, judiciously displayed in a banner salute, press the native mind will in the majority of cases result in that object being obtained without its being necessary to use force.

Time and again in the early stages of Northern Nigerian administration I have known cases where the administrative staff at outlying stations would have been swept out of existence had it not been for the massive superior force ^{or} ~~name~~ of the name (para 10) and this aspect of the question requires attention.

no previous acquaintance with Europeans believe even more what they see than what they hear, until they come to know us better.

When breaking new ground, therefore, it is in every way preferable and more politic to lay all our cards on the table and to refrain from attempting to exercise control over ignorant savages unless visible means of enforcing it are at hand. To rely too much on a prestige which is still to be earned, is to offer chances which should not be offered, as Mr. Ainsworth says in another connection.

In such circumstances the presence alone of a well-disciplined body of troops, under their own officers (a very important point) is primarily an insurance against hostilities rather than an instrument for their repression. It is the old principle of prevention being better than cure.

It is evident that Mr. Ainsworth, at any rate, realizes this, from his statement that..... "the presence of an... force in the country..... has been an object lesson to the Kisi which it will 'take a long time for them to forget.' This object lesson was unfortunately not provided when it should have been, namely at the outset.

The methods employed in extending Government control over the Munshi country in Northern Nigeria, afford convincing evidence of the truth of this view and also an admirable instance of the manner in which that aim can be realized without bloodshed, by foresight and patience, vide the attached copy of the Resident's Annual Report for 1907 and from Sir E. Gibb's despatch No. 364 of 15.7.07.

These methods, notably those described by the Resident in 2 (1) of the extract from his Report above mentioned, are in striking contrast to the culpably reckless and hard manner in which the Opening up of the Mushi country.

"2. About a third of the country occupied by the Mushi tribe has been opened up without having met with the necessity of using force and the probability thereby created that the remainder of the country can in the same way be brought under Administrative control, loose in many ways though that control may be.

The Occupation of the country may be divided into two stages: (1) for the first three months of the year a system of patrolling with half a Company under the guidance of a Political Officer. Base at Fukari from which the patrol, constantly on the move, radiated westward as far as the Katsena River. The method adopted was, shortly stated, to get into touch with each fraction of the tribe through the intermediary of other friendly Mushis related by marriage and then to induce them to come in and see the Political Officer before ever a move was made into their country. When the patrol arrived their objects were known, suspicions had been previously allayed by the exercise of tact, patience, and an interminable amount of talking: the force had been properly introduced, and and was accompanied by the headman of the fraction. Every advantage was taken of the fact that each man, division, clan, fraction, group and cluster, pursues a system of endless vendetta with the next, the Administration therefore represented itself as the necessary force majeure willing and capable of giving decisions and seeing that they were enforced, exactly that sort of control that all primitive peoples desire and are thankful for. Incapable themselves of rendering justice outside their own cluster, without the power of co-operating to enforce a ruling, and burdened with an interminable series of retaliations that cannot be brushed aside, such peoples accept with what might almost be termed gratitude the directions of an apparently powerful stranger, especially if the latter combines with all those qualifications required by the nature of his duties those rarer ones of sympathy and insight into the minds of a natural people. At this stage, however, the Administration cannot commit itself to judicial decrees which must be enforced, for it either lacks the necessary force or it would be politically inexpedient to use it; consequently arbitration has in almost every instance been the method adopted and most of the time the necessity to resort to that a considerable amount of bluff has at times been used.

(2) On April 1st the permanent occupation of a site

site ten miles below the rapids of the Katsena River, a site which was called Katsena Allah, after the old abakwa-ribe town of that name. Here the force was increased to a full Company, and N. V. B. with 2 officers, one British N. C. O. and the Political Officer in charge of the Division. A Medical Officer was later added to the staff.

From this centre in the very heart of the Munshi country the same policy has been pursued, very gradually increasing our control over all these clans on the right bank of the river and preparing the way for an equally peaceful penetration next year of the larger portion of Munshiland lying to the west and south of the Katsena River.

"Closely following on the occupation of Katsena Allah came a large number of native traders followed later by the Niger Company Limited, who have built a factory and asked for a Lease of land.

Desp. No. 1364
of 15. 1. 07.

In a despatch relating to the occupation of the Munshi country Sir Percy Girouard wrote as follows:-

(paragraph 4)....."Captain Gordon who has been in immediate charge of the occupation, writes: "I think I have sufficiently shown that a peaceful development is dependent on an efficient political staff, its accessibility and ubiquity."

(paragraph 5)..... As regards taxation, the Resident is strongly of opinion that no direct tax should be imposed.....

(paragraph 6)..... I have issued instructions that the whole country should be retained for the present as an unsettled district (i.e. an area which cannot be entered by any Europeans other than administrative officers for any purpose without the Governor's special permission. R.P.L.) and that the Resident should proceed very slowly and cautiously with any taxation proposals.

I cannot speak too highly of the methods which have been adopted by the Resident in charge of the Province, by the Political Officer in immediate charge of the duty and the officer in charge of the patrol.

By careful co-operation (i.e. between the Political staff and the military officers in the Munshi country. R.P.L.) and slow but steady progress no punitive action whatever has been necessary. In view of the character of the people and the many former reports as to their intractability, the results achieved are most satisfactory"

In a later despatch^x on the same subject the High Commissioner observed:-

(paragraph 10). "....." In conclusion I would like to say that no attempt has been or will be made to impose direct taxation on this people until they are receiving the full benefits of settled Government. when I have no doubt they will readily accept taxation by exchange for the great benefits which will undoubtedly accrue to them."

In acknowledging the former despatch, Lord Elgin observed that he had read "with pleasure and satisfaction, the High Commissioner's remarks on the methods pursued by the Resident with the object of bringing under control and opening up to trade without any resort to force the country of a people formerly deemed intractable" advance into the Kisi country was made, and form an object lesson which the English ~~Union~~ ^{Union} ~~authorities~~ ^{authorities} would do well to study.

24. Sir J. Hayes Sadler observes that he is "convinced that without the severe lesson they (the Kisi) have received, their submission would not have been complete, nor would the pacification of the country have been so assured as it is now."

In the light of the results which can be achieved by the use of proper methods, I do not think that the Governor's opinion can be accepted, for ~~proceedings~~ ^{proceedings} were not employed in Kisi.

As to the killing ~~of~~ ^{of} 250 Kisi, the ~~loss~~ ^{loss} of some 80 women and children, the ~~destruction~~ ^{destruction} of 12,000 cattle and sheep, and the ~~total~~ ^{total} destruction of villages, was in Sadler's (I. Sadler) courageous terms a "severe lesson" which ensured complete submission and pacification at an earlier date than might have been possible without

Nevertheless I maintain that had due precautions and proper measures been adopted at the outset, there would have been no necessity for a lesson of this nature or it to have been administered.

The proudest moment in a District Officer's life in a new country is when he has the happy consciousness of having won control over natives by his superiority in brains and not in brute force.

26. It is evident as the following extracts from his reports show that these considerations were not foreign to Mr. Kineworth at all. "I am of opinion that a Company of troops should be stationed there (Kisii station) for some time to come, not that they need always be in the country, but the natives should learn to know that they are available."

"Constant patrolling for some time will tend to get Kisii generally in perfect order." "and now all that is required is to leave the Company of Kings African Rifles in the country, which should, in consultation with the District Commissioner, be employed as much as possible on patrol work."

These measures are precisely those which should have been adopted at the outset. Col. Sadler, it is true, states that he was prepared to station a Company of troops in Kisii in August 1907, and did not do so because he was informed that this step was unnecessary.

This circumstance, however, merely demonstrates the bad judgement of the man on the spot. It does not affect the correctness of the view stated above. If had Col. Sadler and his advisers known the business properly this Company would have been sent to Kisii with Mr. Northcote at the start as a matter of course.

28. The punitive expedition under Col. Mackay and the means of extending the reputation of the Kisii as fighters. They are described by the Chief Staff Officer as "a negro race" who have earned the reputation of "having a noble belief, which reputation from the experience gained from this expedition is an entirely false one. With the exception of one or two occasions when they assembled in some force on the flanks of detached columns, they offered no resistance to the advance, and a few shots were generally sufficient to cause them to rapidly disperse."

Col. Mackay, commanding the force, states: "The Kisii do not use bows and arrows but fight with a shield and spear" (para: VII) . . . "I never could induce him to come to close quarters" . . . (para: VIII) . . . "I may justly say that their efforts throughout were weak" (para: VIII). Judging from para: VII, the tribesmen seem never to have come closer to the columns than 200 or 300 yards.

Mr. Ainsworth confirms this. "Personally," he says, "I believe that the first day's operations were responsible for the almost entire collapse of any fighting qualities which the Kisii fighting man may have had, certain it is, however, that on the first day they showed no inclination to engage any of the fighting columns."

The enemy's casualties were 435 killed and wounded, according to the Staff Diary; they lost 7,000 cattle and 5000 sheep and goats.

the estimated value of over $14,000, and a large number of the villages were burned. In view of the statements noted in the preceding paragraph, this punishment appears to me to have been unnecessarily severe. If the resistance of the Kistis was broken down after the first two days fighting, when the returns show that they lost 20 men killed, 78 prisoners and 320 head of livestock of an estimated value of over $1,000, and many villages burnt, was it necessary to continue the operations against them for as much as 14 days more, at a further cost of over 200 killed and wounded, over 8,000 head of cattle and sheep captured and many more villages burnt?

30. To how great an extent the loss of life that occurred was due to the methods employed in the expedition is evident from the following extracts from the Military Reports.

Major Kirkpatrick, C.S.O. says, "The only way of forcing them (Kistis) to fight is by seizing their cattle and burning their villages."

The O.C., Col. Mackay, says the same thing, (para: VIII of his Report, q.v.) and adds, "I therefore decided to make every effort to capture his stock with a view to bringing him to action or at least to attack the camp at night but I never could induce him to come to these quarters."

Col. Mackay and a soldier was of course correct according to his lights in doing so, could to bring his enemy to action, but impossible to overlook the irony of such a situation, where the stated to be in "revolt" against our authority, (which it had never recognized), persistently declined in spite of all inducements to fight the force sent to subdue it, save only in order to prevent the seizure or destruction of its villages and property.

I do not question for a moment the fact that the Kisi were hostile to Government and its authority, as they understood these things, but speaking as an ex-Political Officer, with personal experience of punitive expeditions under exactly similar conditions, I have no hesitation in saying that this hostility could have been overcome at the cost of far less bloodshed and suffering by the exercise of less drastic and more patient methods.

31. In this connection, I would invite reference to Memo No. 7, paragraphs 5, 6 and 8-10 of Sir. F. Lugard's Memoranda for Provincial Officers in Northern Nigeria (revised 7, 1906) containing admirably framed instructions as to the proper procedure to be followed on punitive expeditions.

Col. Sadler should be asked whether any ultimatum was delivered to the Kitutu or other clans before hostilities were begun or during their progress, and whether the Kisi were given ^{reasonable} opportunity to make their submission, pay a fine, and surrender the natives guilty of the attack on the life of Mr. Harcourt and of the murder of Mr. ...

32. The objections to the scale on which punishment was applied to the Kisi are fairly and moderately stated in a letter to the "Morning Post" of the 2nd April 1908 by "K. H. H." (attached) and notes with extracts from a leader of the subject which appeared in the "East African Standard", one of the best places in which one would expect to find the native's side of the case fairly considered.

I agree unreservedly with the views of "Imperialist" and the "Standard", and they constitute an indictment of the Administration and its methods which calls for the serious consideration of the S. of S.

33. I do not think it is realized how severely the natives in the East African Provinces have suffered by these methods. In my minute on Gov. 13086/07

I summarized the results of the pirer punitive expeditions carried out between 1902 - 1906. Inclusive of the figures for the Kisii expedition above stated, the Administration between 1902 and February 1908 has captured from the Kikuyu, Nandi, Sotik, Kamillo, and Kisii tribes 35,600 cattle, 70,000 sheep and goats, and inflicted on them a loss of 2500 killed and wounded.

Taking the cattle at Rs 30 and the sheep and goats at Rs 2 a head (the official figures on the present occasion, vide App. Q, Gov/15165/08), this represents a total value of over 290,000 in confiscated livestock.

34. It should be remembered also that with the sole exception, I think, of the present Kisii expedition, each of these expeditions was accompanied by a large number of Masai or other friendly, over whom little or no control was exercised, and who enjoyed unlimited opportunities of looting and was not surprised to hear from an officer of the King's African Rifles that on such occasions that Colonial's probably appropriated in this way as many cattle and sheep as were captured by the regular troops for Government.

The severity of the "lesson" in such cases is accordingly far greater than would appear from the official returns.

38. On the present expedition there is the same want of moderation and definite policy with regard to the punitive measures.

The Government's terms were not formulated in advance or stated to the tribesmen through the medium of friendly, as far as can be seen, no figure was fixed beforehand for the fine on cattle, ^{with intention of} no halt was made after the first blow had been struck and the main body of the enemy had become utterly demoralized, to see if the lesson, as far as it went, would result in the surrender of the criminals and the submission of the tribes.

The operations did not cease until 38 natives had been killed or wounded, many villages burnt, and livestock to the estimated value of £2,400 seized, in respect of each one of the six murders, actual or attempted, of which members of the tribe had been guilty.

38. It may be said that this manner of stating the case is incorrect and unfair, inasmuch as a portion only of these losses is to be regarded as punishment inflicted in obedience to the Government's orders that fines should be imposed on those clans which had "revolted", the balance being the unavoidable and unnecessary outcome of the commanding officer's compliance with Col. Sadler's further instructions to him to "restore order" and "quell the revolt". That is probably true, from the Commanding Officer's point of view, the natives could not possibly appreciate such distinctions, and it is with the effect produced upon their minds by these operations that I am immediately concerned.

To the Kafir the whole of these operations and their results can only have appeared as a punishment for the actual killing of the 5 portives and the wounding of Mr. Worthoft, and not in part for the "revel" against Government which these advances and the subsequent attack on the station were held to constitute.

Viewed from this standpoint, the Staff Officer Standard's reference to the "punishment" inflicted on a large number of human beings, and many of them in the nature of things were probably originally innocent of any "evil intent" has an added significance, and the ill-timed severity of these punitive measures may well leave in the native's mind an abiding sense of injury and injustice.

39. It is impossible to believe that all this bloodshed and destruction was either necessary or politic.

After the first two days, when the contemptible nature of the Kaffer fighting qualities had become evident, and they had suffered heavy loss in lives, prisoners and property (20 killed, 70 prisoners, 3,000 head of live stock seized and many villages burnt), these operations should have been stopped, and under your orders to go into with the friendly neutral clans and through the British still disarmed the command.

The result of the day which by the Government's orders was to be the point of view, but the natives could not possibly appreciate such a distinction, and it is with the effect produced upon their minds by these operations that I am immediately concerned.

To the Kiar, the whole of these operations and their results can only have appeared as a punishment for the actual killing of the 5 natives and the wounding of Mr. Northcott, and not in particular the "revolt" against Government which these offences and the subsequent attack on the station were held to constitute.

Viewed from this standpoint, the African Standard's reference to the "punishment" inflicted on a large number of human beings, and many of them in the nature of things were probably originally innocent of any "evil intent" has an added significance, and the ill-timed severity of these punitive measures may well leave in the native's mind an abiding sense of injury and injustice.

38. It is impossible to believe that all this bloodshed and destruction was either necessary or politic.

After the first two days, when the formidable nature of the tribes fighting qualities had become evident, and they had suffered heavy loss in lives, prisoners and property, (20 killed, 70 prisoners, 2,230 head of live stock seized) many villages had to evacuate operations shortly have been stopped, and under your hands to get into touch with the friendly or neutral clans surrounding the station, still disinclined to come in.

The meeting of the 14th which, by the way, was not a success, was held at the

... should have been decided on and the consequences of non-payment should have been made at the same time, and these should have taken the form of a refusal of police operations for a stated period, one day in this case would have been sufficient, and so on.

The natives would thus have had full opportunity of understanding what was required of them.
The Government's object would have been attained with the infliction of a minimum amount of suffering on the people.

50. This is practically the procedure laid down by Sir G. Lugard in No. 7, para. 6 of his Memoranda already mentioned.

As soon as the full amount of the fine had been paid or otherwise obtained, the troops should have retired from the district, leaving a strong garrison at the Kishi station.

One company and a half would have been sufficient for the purpose. The system followed so successfully in the Yungui country in Northern Nigeria, which may be summed up as patience and patrols, should then have been followed in order to get into touch with the more remote tribes and gradually obtain control over them.

If it is admitted that the extension of British authority over native tribes should be carried out with the least possible suffering on their side, then patience and tact must be given a fair trial first, and the employment of force regulated to the backbone and not to the

As soon as military operations are once in progress, however, the temptation to take a short cut and to obtain immediate success by force of arms is a strong one. Such a misuse of strength is costly and bad in principle, and the present is a case in point.

Had the steps recommended by Mr. Ainsworth after the cessation of hostilities (vide para. above) been taken at the outset, there is no doubt whatever in my mind that those hostilities would not have occurred.

The conquest of the district would in all probability have been a bloodless one. In the light of what we now know regarding the true value of the Yoruba reputation which the British previously enjoyed, the success of a policy of gradual and peaceful penetration carried out by experienced officers on the lines adopted in the Munshi country in Northern Nigeria, can hardly be a matter for doubt.

There is of course always the possibility, where the relations between Government and savage tribes are still in embryo, that a very slight deviation from the right line of policy may arouse anger and suspicion culminating in isolated acts of violence or even a general outbreak.

Every day of peaceful communication between European and African, however, promotes mutual understanding, breaks down distrust and thereby renders the chances of trouble more and more remote.

When trouble comes Oracles are that it will then be local rather than general, and the task of repressing it proportionately lighter. This, I think, is the universal experience under such conditions.

For the above reasons, therefore, I hold that the loss of life and property inflicted on the Kikuyu was far greater than the circumstances warranted and that the Governor is responsible for this undeserved severity, in that he failed to lay down a proper course of procedure for the guidance of the Officer Commanding and the Political Officer with the Expedition.

41. The military authorities, however, are in no sense responsible for the errors of the Civil power, the result of which they were called upon to counteract, and as far as the reports show, the troops were well handled and did all that was required of them satisfactorily.

The Officer Commanding, however, recommends the award of the African General Service Medal and a clasp for rounding up livestock, and shooting down at six and seven hundred yards and without loss to themselves, savages armed only with spears who "except on one or two occasions, when they assembled in some force on the flanks of detached columns, offered no resistance to the advance." (C. S. O.'s report) is held to constitute a sufficient qualification for a medal, no doubt they deserve it. But if a medal is given for an exploit of this kind, it might be with greater justice be bestowed on every private who qualifies as a marksman on the range at Nairobi, for his achievement and his deserts are far greater.

There was no fighting in the real sense, and such opposition as there was can hardly be regarded as a serious test of military qualities.

42. Two "regrettable incidents" must be noted.

Thirty-two women and forty-six children were made prisoners, it is not stated why or for how long or what became of them. This makes the very worst impression on natives, and gives rise to reports that we have caught them in order to eat or enslave them, or some such rubbish which as a rule has the effect of making natives who would otherwise be friendly quite unapproachable.

Unless it is desired to take prisoners in order to use them as envoys, failing other means of opening communications with hostile natives, the practice should be strictly forbidden.

No explanation is given in this case and it should be asked for.

"Onuongu himself was unfortunately shot by our men yesterday. I say unfortunately because it appears he was on his way into camp to see the S.P.O. when he was killed".

If this chief was on his way to camp to see Mr. Ainsworth, it must have been apparent to those who met and killed him that he was bent on a peaceful errand and not coming to attack them.

The only possible conclusion is that the troops regarded every native within range as an enemy and shot him at sight.

From my own experience I know that that is the natural tendency of native African troops in a hostile country and how difficult it is to restrain them.

This is the only incident of the expedition and I am afraid it explains to some extent the heavy casualties inflicted on the clans.

A full report should be called for from the officer actually in command of the men who shot Onuongu as to the circumstances of the occurrence.

O.C.'s Report para. 11. Enclosure to Gov. 15165.

One circumstance calls for special mention. When Col. Sadler ordered the mobilization of the troops on the 15th of January, 1908, only 50 rifles were actually available at Nairobi, the Headquarters of the Kings African Rifles in the Protectorate.

The main reason for this was the fact that the 1st Batt. were relieving their Zanzibar Detachment.

Had really serious trouble broken out anywhere in the Protectorate, the situation would have been a grave one and Col. Gaugh should be asked for his views as to whether steps cannot be taken to make better provision against such a contingency.

political situation, marked by the claim of law and order, the recognition by the King of this allegiance due from them as subjects of the Crown and of the authority and prestige of the Government which in fact had never existed.

46. This phraseology is no doubt loosely employed, but it may nevertheless denote a radically unbound and equally loose habit of mind (analogous to that noted by Sir. P. Girouard), namely an unconscious tendency on the part of a certain type of European to regard any native in a new Protectorate as a law-abiding subject from the mere fact of his being placed by Providence within its borders and, by Proclamation, under its laws, irrespective of whether he has ever come into actual touch with the Administration or not.

Officials who take no pains to readjust their preconceived ideas in the face of new conditions run a great risk of remaining blind to the Native's side of the case, and therefore to the most efficacious ways of dealing with them.

47. In the same way individuals who without reflection apply the terms disobedience and revolt to the attempt of a tribe to repel the invasion of strangers and preserve its own freedom are naturally predisposed in favor of the adoption of the severe measure which civilized men are accustomed to associate with the commission of the open defiance of established authority implied by these terms.

The spirit of fair play and of generosity to an opponent, savage though he be, is apt under such circumstances to be obscured by the less chivalrous sentiments animating those who believe themselves to be inflicting punishment on a criminal, and when that punishment is not defined by law and the mandate is given in general terms capable of wide interpretation. It will be realized how great is the danger of overstepping the bounds of justice.
the Executive*

Until those in authority are taught to "set the game above the prize," as Newbolt puts it, there will always be the danger of their being so ready to convince their opponents by force rather than persuasion.

The second factor is a financial one. The requirements of a new Protectorate are always in excess of its means, and a Governor's first concern is to increase the revenue by any possible means. That the East African Protectorate is no exception to the rule is evident from the particular stress which Col. Sadler has invariably laid upon the necessity of increasing the administrative staff in order to collect revenue from new districts which would otherwise contribute little or nothing.

It is undoubtedly the practice of the East African Protectorate authorities to impose but a tax on a district as soon as the organization of the district staff permits of its collection.

In the present instance Mr. Ainsworth mentions in his report the payment by two of the chiefs of the Kitutu clan of a portion of their hut tax on the 28th. of January, a few days after the active operations had begun, so that the tax must have been imposed in Kisii immediately after the opening of the station by Mr. Northcote.

In his despatch, Col. Sadler writes "the expedition, though the loss of life is to be regretted, has had the effect of opening up a rich country which will now be brought under effective administration, and should

... has become one of the best paying districts of the
"Protectorate."

49. In the expedition of 1905, the official returns show that the Niamas suffered a loss of 394 killed and wounded and of 5,000 head of cattle (approximately £10,000). Adding the figures for the present expedition, it appears that the Government have punished the tribe to the total extent of 30 casualties and 47,000 head of cattle and sheep, valued at over £24,000.

Notwithstanding this heavy punishment they are regularly taxed, the moment Government is in a position to demand payment.

Here again I must go to Northern Nigeria for an example of the right policy.

In his despatch No. 344 of 15.7.07 relative to the Munshi occupation, Sir E. Girouard wrote (para-
5) . . . "As regards taxation, the Resident"
"is strongly of opinion that no direct tax should be"
"imposed" on the Munshis. . . . "I have issued"
"instructions that the Resident should proceed very"
"slowly and cautiously with any taxation proposals."

In a further despatch, the F. O. states: -
"In conclusion I would like to say that no"
"attempt has been or will be made to impose direct"
"taxation on this people (the Munshis) until they are"
"receiving the full benefits of settled Government,"
"when I have no doubt they will readily accept tax"
"ation in exchange for the great benefits which will"
"undoubtedly accrue to them."

50. The conditions were the same in East Africa Protectorate and Northern Nigeria though infinitely more difficult in the latter - a savage tribe distinguished for its raiding on its weaker neighbours, guilty of isolated acts of hostility towards Government officers and others, and wholly opposed to any attempt on the part of the Government to acquire and exercise any control over them.

In Northern Nigeria, the country of the tribe was opened up to trade without any resort to force by the patience and tact of three or four officers, civil and military, and a carefully thought-out system of patrols, friendly overtures through native intermediaries, and arbitration in local disputes (vide attached extract from the President's Muri's Annual Report).

No taxation was or will be imposed until a sufficient quid pro quo exists in the shape of the benefits resulting from settled Government and freedom of trade.

51. 56.

In the East Africa Protectorate, on the other hand, disaster was courted from the outset by the establishment in the tribe of a weak post under a solitary and not very capable junior civilian. The intentions and very existence of the Government which he represented were not made properly known to the people, and hut-tax was imposed almost immediately. The visible weakness and unimpressive character of the post and its garrison invited a natural attempt on the part of the principal clan to get rid of it. This attempt was followed by the destruction at the hands of a military expedition of a large number of lives and villages and the seizure of £14,000 worth of livestock, and the bulk of the clans forced to fly from their country and seek refuge in neighbouring districts, whose inhabitants took the opportunity thus afforded them of relieving the demoralized refugees of a good deal more property.

The taxation was imposed on the tribe at the beginning is to be continued.

It would be difficult to find a sharper contrast of one that is sure to the discredit of the East Africa Protectorate administration.

30.
32

The policy of taxing the inhabitants of a newly occupied district before they have come to understand the nature and the benefits of civilized Government, still less enjoyed them, is unjust and impolitic in degree.

No value is given in return for the money paid, and the native can hardly regard the tax otherwise than as a forced contribution arbitrarily exacted by the stronger power. He pays through fear alone and gains in the paying a constant and permanent reason for disliking the Government and its agents.

Possibly it might be advisable to require payment of a small tax from each Chief or Headman, not for Revenue purposes but in token of their recognition of Government as their rulers.

Whether this is so or not, ^{the} right policy is to abstain from imposing any general taxation for at least a year or two years after the occupation of the district, whether by conquest or otherwise.

By the time that period has elapsed, provided that the District Officers are up to their work, the native will in all probability readily accept it, as Sir. P. Girouard states. Even then, taxation should ^{only} be gradually imposed.

When, as is the case of Kisumu, the effective occupation of the district and the punishment of its inhabitants for outrages on Government Officials has been carried out concurrently, by means of military operations resulting in heavy loss of life, in the confiscation of some £24,000 worth of livestock in the last 3 years, and in suffering of other kinds, the argument against the immediate imposition of taxation becomes far stronger.

With the taste of such a lesson fresh in his mind, it will be long before the native is inclined to recognize the benevolent aims of Government or the benefits theoretically inseparable from administration by a civilized race.

The short view is to impose taxation at once, preferably, no doubt, by peaceful means, but if necessary by force, whether the native receives any equivalent in return or not.

The long view is to defer taxation until Government is in a position to give ^{and actually does give} good value in return, and thus to ensure, as far as such a thing can be ensured, the recognition by the native of the fact that his interests and those of the Government are identical.

It would be interesting to know what amount of Hut Tax Revenue is derived from the outlying districts of the East Africa Protectorate away from the Railway, and how much of the total is expended in ways which are of direct benefit to their inhabitants.

No doubt the development of one portion of the country has an indirect effect upon the prosperity of another, and the preservation of law and order and the consequent freedom of communications and trade are directly though not at once beneficial.

I should prefer to see Government go a step further and give the natives of a newly occupied and taxed district an immediate incentive to ^{as a result of Government protection} and an opportunity for self-improvement by establishing (or subsidizing) a technical school or class of handicrafts and a small model plantation at each Government station, where instruction would be given free. I do not think we are doing nearly as much as we ought in this direction. Too much of the revenue from native taxation, especially in East Africa Protectorate, goes to meet expenditure on objects which are only remotely beneficial to the native.

56. There is a wide-spread tendency among the small communities of European officials ruling each over several millions of natives in the various tropical African States and Protectorates to accept and to apply without discrimination the theory that the best way in which to obtain effective control over coloured races, in the interests of good Government and progress is to "smash them first and let them down gently afterwards" as I once overheard a Government officer express it.

Necessary and unavoidable as this drastic procedure may be and in under certain circumstances, its adoption is certainly utterly unjustifiable in the great majority of instances in which native races display reluctance to bow to our authority at the outset and fail to recognize the ability of Government to maintain authority in case of need by force.

57. If that ability is suitably brought home to them by a judicious and timely parade of force, it will rarely become necessary to use force. "Si vis pacem, para bellum" is a maxim which holds good to an even greater extent among savages than among civilized races, and if it were acted upon more consistently than it is by tropical administrations there would be fewer punitive expeditions and less bloodshed and demoralization.

It is no doubt recognized to a certain extent, and for that reason each African Protectorate maintains a military establishment and the police carry rifles instead of truncheons.

58. In the East African Protectorate and other Protectorates as well the material available for the purposes of affording an object lesson in the reserve force at the disposal of Government is in my opinion not distributed to the best advantage; its effect as a deterrent is consequently to a large extent wasted.

The policy of Government is surely to prevent disorder, and not merely to contain itself with providing the means of suppressing it, after it has arisen; the armed strength of Government should therefore be dispersed accordingly.

In new Protectorates especially recognition of this principle is of vital importance during the initial stages of rendering the occupation of unknown areas effective because the risks of disorder are greatest at that period, growing less as civilizing agencies are brought to bear.

It is precisely in these Protectorates however that the policy of prevention is rendered difficult and often subordinated to the policy of cure by reason of the conflict between military and political considerations the existence and effects of which are I think not fully recognized.

The military policy is one of concentration;—the maintenance at one or possibly two central points of a body of troops which can be dispatched without delay to any part of the country where and when the situation calls for military action.

This policy is perfectly sound from a military point of view, and moreover has two great advantages; it makes for the efficiency which can only be obtained by combined training, and for the financial economy which results from the reduction in the number of troops rendered possible by the superior efficiency and mobility of a concentrated striking force.

The policy of the Civil Power on the other hand is, or should be, to maintain in the various districts a show of force sufficient to impress the natives with the fact that resistance to authority would be futile. The more unsettled the district, the greater the show of force required at the outset. This policy is naturally antagonistic to that of the military authorities, for it involves decentralization and the dispersal of military units; battalions are split up into companies, combined training becomes impossible, the spur of competition is absent, and the general efficiency and smartness of the troops undoubtedly suffers.

The contest between concentration and economy on the one hand and decentralization and increased expenditure on the other has resulted too often in the victory of the former policy. In such countries as the East Africa Protectorate the fact is greatly to be deplored, for the outbreak of disorder with its resulting loss of prestige, is directly facilitated and its suppression attended by far greater difficulties, delays and bloodshed than would otherwise be the case.

When a new district in Northern Nigeria was brought under effective control, a company of troops was stationed at its headquarters as a matter of course, as an obvious means to ward off any possible agitation, and mainly due to that common-sense precaution that the civil staff had time to build up by peaceful methods an influence and authority over the originally hostile population, in process of time rendered it possible to reduce the garrison and in some cases to dispense with it altogether.

Eventually the political conditions will be ripe for the unreserved adoption of the concentration policy, but until the outlying districts of a large Protectorate have fallen into line with the settled central districts, that policy can only be gradually developed.

1. In the case of the Kisii outbreak, one civilian and 50 civil Police of no military value were allowed to enter and settle in the Lunenburg territory, of which account was one of the most unsettled and dangerous districts in the Protectorate. The news of the attempt on Mr. Northcote's life reached Kisumu by runner on the 12th. January, so that presumably it occurred a day or two previously, say the 10th. January.

Mr. Ainsworth telegraphed to Wm. Capt. Bois, O. C. Lumbwa, the nearest military post, who had one Company of the 3rd. Batt. King's African Rifles; and this officer with 50 men reached Kisii station on the 15th. January.

The news of the outbreak was received by telegraph at Nairobi on the 14th. January and the expedition under Col. Mackay did not arrive at Kisii until the 23rd.

The regular troops reached the scene of the disturbance for 8 days after its outbreak, and then only one officer and 50 men (half of the garrison) of a neighbouring district some days march away. The main body of the troops did not arrive at Kisii headquarters until 8 days later, that is to say a fortnight after the attack on Mr. Northcote.

Note

I do not reckon the 50 Police under Mr. Teran who left Kisumu on the 1st, and presumably reached Kisii about the 15th, or 17th, as they were of no military value. (1912 para 10.)

Had the Kisii despised the warlike reputation which they actually enjoyed in official circles, Mr. Northcote and his Police would have been wiped out before the Lunwa detachment could have reached him.

The fact that the tribesmen subsequently belied it is no wise absolves the Administration from the blame which is incontestably due to it for failing to safeguard its authority and the lives of its servants.

The necessity of using force in order to prevent the occurrence of disorder is vitally important for another reason, namely because the actual application of force is a confession of weakness rather than an exhibition of strength, under such conditions as those in Kisii.

The resort to forcible measures in order to obtain authority under these conditions simply amounts to this, that the local Administration notwithstanding a highly trained political staff and the varied resources of civilization at its disposal has been unable, or as in this case too incompetent, to win the confidence and the ^{voluntary} military cooperation of a tribe of primitive savages without first terrorizing them by bloodshed, stock-raiding and house-burning.

The use of force on this occasion was due to the neglect on the part of the Government and its agents of the usual administrative procedure, one evil leading to another.

Having once adopted forcible means in order to inflict punishment for outrage: the Government reluctantly postponed them in order to bring about the political unification of the Khasi, normal procedure being again neglected.

The extension of administrative control over the tribe might have been effected by peaceful methods at the cost of time and patience, and the loss to Government of a certain amount of New Tax revenues, but in all probability with little or no further bloodshed, if active operations had been stopped after the first blow had fallen on the tribe.

The Government however preferred to attain the desired result at once and did so in the space of 14 days.

The tribe lost 300 men killed and wounded and 12000 head of livestock; many villages were destroyed and the principal clans thoroughly demoralized and scattered.

On our side there was one casualty, a native levy slightly wounded, and the Administration reaped an estimated net profit of £12,000 after deducting the cost of operations, and

Sir J. Hayes Sadler, whose regret for the loss of life was quickened, if I recollect rightly, by a telegram from Lord Elgin, reports with satisfaction which he evidently expects the the Secretary of State to share, the acquisition of what "should soon become one of the best paying districts of the Protectorate."

With regard to the policy of fines, the O.C. Troops was instructed to exact payment of fines from the clan or clans responsible for the death of the Police and porters, and from the clans which "revolted."

No exception can be taken to the first order; the system of money payments for killing—death-money—prevails generally among African races and if met among the Khasi, would nevertheless be readily understood by them. It is essential however to announce the amount beforehand and to abide by it.

To fine a tribe or clan for "revolting" (vide paras 44-47) when it has first to be brought by force under an authority which has neither been recognized by nor effectively exercised over it is to my thinking not only impolitic but wholly at variance with ordinary ideas of justice.

The administration of even-handed justice in a lawless society is the most potent of the instruments calculated to secure the respect and obedience of primitive races and to render them immune from the loss of their independence at the hands of strange Europeans.

Resistance to the first attempts of strangers to deprive them of their freedom of action and especially to exact payment of tribute, is not considered an offence among African tribes anywhere than it is among civilized peoples, and to fine a tribe for evading a natural instinct to preserve its freedom and its property is to revive the methods of the Dark Ages.

It is surely enough to have broken their spirit and conquered their territory without invoking the assistance of legal ~~technicalities~~ technicalities to turn their armed invasion into a treasonable revolt against a sovereign of whom they had never heard, and on that account to inflict punishment upon them.

A wholesale confiscation of property for such a reason deprives the Government's action of all appearance of an act of justice and degrades it to what is not only in the owners' eyes but in very truth a raiding expedition.

Our superiority to the native is in effect reduced to a superiority in brute force and ability to destroy and rob him, and he looks upon us solely as stronger savages than himself.

The proper course would have been to fix at the outset a definite fine to be paid by the clans responsible for the killing of the Police and porters, and not to have taken a penny more.

I totally disagree with the action of the expedition in subduing the Kisii country by force, for the reasons stated which has neither been recognized by nor effectively exercised over it is to say that it is not only impolitic but wholly at variance with ordinary ideas of justice.

The administration of even-handed justice in a lawless society is the most potent of the instruments calculated to secure the respect and obedience of ^{the} native races and to shield them from the loss of their independence at the hands of strange Europeans.

Resistance to the first attempts of strangers to deprive them of their freedom of action and especially to exact payment of taxes is not considered an offence among African tribes anywhere, but it is among civilized peoples, and to fine a tribe for obeying a natural instinct to preserve its freedom and its property is to revive the methods of the Dark Ages.

It is surely enough to have broken their spirit and conquered their territory without invoking the assistance of legal ~~distinctions~~ technicalities to turn their armed invasion into a treasonable revolt against a sovereignty of whom they had never heard, and on that account to inflict punishment upon them.

Our superiority to the natives is in effect reduced to a superiority in brute force and ability to destroy and rob, and he looks upon us solely as stronger savages than himself.

The proper course would have been to fix at the outset a definite fine to be paid by the clan responsible for the killing of the 4 Police and porters, and not to have taken a penny more.

I totally disagree with the action of the expedition in subduing the Kisii country by force, for the reason stated in paras 30 - 30, but granting for the sake of argument that the O. C.'s policy of seizing livestock in order to bring the Kisii to order for that purpose (para: 30) was necessary, the cattle thus seized should have been unconditionally returned to the natives when that object had been attained.

Gov 15160
para: 3

The fasted stock are it is true to be gradually returned to the tribes in return for work done in the "development of their country."

This is certainly a step in the right direction and but for the action of the Secretary of State (Col. Sadler) would not have been taken. At the most however it only amounts to changing the character of the punishment by making it payable in labour instead of livestock.

The Governor makes no reference to any provision for the families or dependants of the 4 Police and porters killed in the Kisii. These men strictly speaking were killed no doubt in the course of their duty. Their death however, unless the Government can show to the contrary, is directly due to their being improperly employed in an unquiet and unsettled district in which Government servants, with the exception of the police, should never have been permitted much less ordered to go on such a mission without escort until the establishment of the diplomatic relations which enabled them to do so without any risk.

A full report should be called for as to the circumstances of their employment under such conditions. Notably it was due primarily to failure of Mr. Northcote (vide Mr. Ainsworth's ^{report} and Col. Sadler's despatch 1902) to gauge the temper of the tribe and to appreciate what was going on around him.

It seems to me from the information available to be distinctly a case in which compensation should be given from public funds.

The whole episode betrays a degree of administrative ineptitude and a vicious misuse of force on the part of the Administration which deserves the gravest censure, and a

Governor so lacking in a sense of his responsibilities with regard to native races under his care that he is able to see in the result of such methods only a "complete success" and the opening up of a "free" source of Hut Tax revenue. In my opinion utterly unfit to be entrusted with the task of administering an African Protectorate.

To summarize the order sequence the conclusions which these despatches do or do not appear to justify:-

(1) The incompetence of the Executive, as shown by the failure to control its agents and to ensure the prosecution of a definite administrative scheme of opening up new territory, is in the first place responsible for the following results:-

- a. Unsuitable location of Kisii station.
- b. Inadequate and ill-organized civil staff.
- c. Inefficient precautions on the spot against possible disorder (i.e. a Police instead of a military garrison).
- d. Failure to acquaint the Kisii with the character and aims of Government, and neglect to take proper steps to impress their attitude on the set with its resources and power to uphold its authority.
- e. Premature and unjustifiable imposition of taxation.
- f. The failure of Mr. Northcote to realize and react to the political situation.

which led to a riot caused:-

the attempt on the part of the Kisii and other clans to free themselves from a strange and unwelcome administration by a simple boycott, supported by the unimpressive escort of ill-disciplined native subordinates who were employed to enforce it and also the absence of the Police, which could only appear to the tribesmen at that stage as an act of oppression.

The murder of 2 Police and 2 Europeans who were improperly exposed to risks which should not have been run except by patrols of regular troops.

DURING ACTIVE OPERATIONS

neglect to fix and to communicate to the clans, either before or, apparently, during hostilities, the exact amount of the fine which Government had decided to impose in respect of the murder of the Police and porters.

Undue prolongation of punitive measures and failure to cease active operations for more than a few hours at a time in order to give the clans a reasonable opportunity of learning the Government's terms and making their submission.

Unjustifiable and impolitic infliction of a... on various clans because of their revolt against a power to which they had never submitted.

Uncalled-for severity towards the tribe as evidenced by the list of casualties and the amount of property confiscated or destroyed.

Continuance of direct taxation in spite of the heavy losses inflicted on the clans and of the fact that it will take some considerable time before they enjoy any direct benefit from our administration.

70. A more important point upon which the Secretary of State should ask for information is who was responsible for the decision to establish a station in Kisii and bring the district within the area of effective administration.

The assumption by Government of additional responsibilities of so wide a nature should clearly not have been decided upon except after full consideration by the Governor-in-Council, and Col. Sadler should be asked if this was so or not.

There is a direct chain of responsibility from the Assistant District Commissioner on the spot through the District and Provincial Commissioners to the Lieutenant-Governor and the Governor, and these officers are jointly and severally responsible for the administration, errors and omissions which occurred in the district and which brought about the necessity for military action.

The responsibility for the unquestionably harsh measures employed by the expedition to punish and conquer the Kisii rests with the Chief Political Officer and with the Governor and mainly with the latter, since he failed to lay down the proper procedure to be observed.

under such circumstances, and did nothing to check the wholesale destruction of life until recalled to a sense of his responsibilities by a telegram from the Secretary of State.

The whole affair gives the impression that there is a serious failure on the part of the Governor and his headquarter staff to keep in proper touch with and control the executive affairs in the districts, both in matters of general policy and in the execution of particular duties; & that this want of system leads to slackness and neglect of responsibility on the part of the District and Provincial staff, who give their subordinates too free a hand and fail to exercise proper supervision over their actions.

Gohlradler might be sent a copy of Sir F. Lugard's Political Memoranda and asked whether similar standing orders have been compiled for the guidance of executive officers in the Protectorate, and, if so, to furnish the Secretary of State with a copy for consideration.

EAST AFRICA PROTECTORATE.

CONFIDENTIAL (28)

My Lord,

I have the honour to submit copy of a letter dated 17th ultimo from Lieutenant-Colonel F.D. Mackay giving cover to his report on the late operations against the rebellious sections of the Kisi tribe.

2. The reasons which necessitated this punitive expedition have already been fully reported, and in my despatch No. 97 of the 3rd ultimo, I explained the delay which had occurred in the preparation of this report through the illness of the Officer Commanding Troops and the Chief Staff Officer after their return from the expedition.

3. There can be no question but that the situation in Kisi immediately after the attempt on the life of the District Commissioner was critical; the warlike Kitutu clans were in revolt, murdered two Policemen, an Indian trader and some Kavirondo porters and practically invested the Station. This was relieved by Mr. Foran and a party of Police hurriedly despatched from Kisumu, the Company of the King's African Rifles at Lumwa following, and the troops at Headquarters, who were at the time employed employed in quarantine guard duty, mobilizing as quickly as could be managed.

4. The details of the operations are fully set forth in Colonel Mackay's report. They were well planned and efficiently carried out. The result has been that the rebellion has been completely quelled, the refractory clans have made complete submission, and a large area of thickly populated and very fertile country has been brought under administration. I consider that Colonel Mackay and the officers mentioned by him deserve all credit for the successful planning and carrying out of the expedition, and though the loss of life suffered by the refractory clans is to be regretted, I am convinced that without the severe lesson they have received their submission would not have been so complete nor would the pacification of the country have been so assured as it now is.

5. In accordance with Your Lordship's instructions the captured stock will be gradually returned to the tribes in return for work done in the development of their country.

6. The Inspector General, King's African Rifles, has not yet seen the reports I am submitting. Should he have any remarks to make on them I will address Your Lordship again by the first opportunity.

I have the honour to be,
With the highest respect,

My Lord,

The Officer Commanding

To

The Secretary

to the Administration

East Africa Protectorate.

Sir,

In continuation of my letter No. 5/5 dated 13th February 1908 and in accordance with paras 168 to 173 King's African Rifles Regulations, I have the honour to submit for His Excellency's and the Governor's information the enclosed report on the operations in KISII from the date of my instructions to mobilize the Force to the close of the operations.

I enclose Appendices to my report which should be read in conjunction with the same.

In consequence of certain outrages and murders having been committed by the KISII tribe, it was decided by His Excellency the Governor to at once take punitive measures against them.

Offences committed by the KISII Tribe

- Reason for Expedition offences.
- (a) Murder of 2 Policemen.
 - (b) " " I Indian Trader.
 - (c) " " 2 Kavirondo Porters.
 - (d) a personal attack made on Mr. HOSKINS, Assistant District Commissioner, who was severely wounded by a spear.

Situation & Distribution of Troops on Outbreak of 1 Coy. 3rd K.A.A.F.
150 Police
50 Mand Levies.

II. On 15th January 1908 when His Excellency the Governor ordered the mobilisation of the Force as per margin the troops were distributed as follows:

At Nairobi, the Headquarters of the Troops, where there were only some 50 Rifles available. This was owing to the fact that at the time the 1st Battalion King's African Rifles were in the act of relieving their Kampisi Detachment and were in consequence absent from NAIROBI.

The 2 Headquarters Companies of the 3rd Battalion King's African Rifles were employed on Gattle Quarantine duty from the ATHI River Station on the Uganda Railway to the TANA River covering a frontage of over 50 miles and some 50 to 50 miles from NAIROBI.

At the same time the Company at LUMBA which was required to join the Force was furnishing a patrol of 1 British Officer and 25 Rank & File in the KARRAS and KAKAMBYA country. I could therefore only take the Field with about 100 rifles whereas I had estimated that a force of 500 rifles was necessary for the successful carrying out of His Excellency's instructions.

Intelligence III.
communications

On the outbreak of hostilities practically nothing was known of the KISII Tribe or their country. The Provincial Commissioner of KISUMU Province (of which the KISII District forms part) had only been some two months in that part of the Protectorate and had never personally come in contact with the KISII nor could he produce any information in his Office that was of any use to me for the forthcoming operations.

Mr NORRINGTON, the Assistant District Commissioner, in KISII was lying wounded at the Government Station and was not in a condition to furnish me with such information as he possessed and the greatest difficulty was experienced by us in deciding from which point to take my advance.

After carefully considering the situation it appeared to me that the mouth of the BOWDO River, which point, on Lake VICTORIA NYANZA is nearest to the KISII country would be the most suitable spot on which to concentrate.

Soundings of the lake in that part were taken and it was discovered that KONGO BAY could be used for the small Steam Launch PERRY ANDERSON to enter and tow Berges with stores etc and that sufficient depth of water was available.

The troops were moved by rail to KISUMU and thence by water transport to KONGO BAY which is some 3 to 4 hours steaming from PORT FLORENCE.

This enabled me to concentrate the force within 19 miles of the KISII Boundary and 23 of KISII Station. At this place some 2 1/2 miles from the Lake I formed my Base Depot which was held by a small party of Police under a Civil Officer who acted as Base Commandant.

On the 23 KISII attacking Mr NORTHCOKE which may be considered as the first real move in the rebellion some 68 police only were in the KISII Government Station.

On receiving the news that Mr NORTHCOKE had been wounded, the Provincial Commissioner KISUMU Province, sent on a Medical Officer with a small escort which failed to get through to KISII owing to the hostile attitude of the tribes on the way.

A further party of police were hurried out forward to do their utmost to get through to Mr NORTHCOKE and at the same time I British Officer and 50 Rank & File 3rd Battalion King's African Rifles were despatched from the Detachment at LUMWA as reinforcements. Both these parties made KISII Station their objective as reliable reports came to hand that the KISII were actively engaged in besieging and attacking the Government Station (KISII).

Both the reinforcements of King's African Rifles and Police who picked up the Medical Officer, got into the Station without suffering any loss, arriving on 30th January 1908. Captain BOIS 3rd King's African Rifles who commanded the Detachment from LUMWA now assumed Command of the Force in KISII and set to work to fortify the Station and make it secure from any attacks as he observed the tribe gathering in great numbers on the surrounding hills and assuming a very hostile attitude. Owing to the direct roads being closed he could not get any information through that either himself or police got safely through so that I had to make every endeavour to get a sufficient force concentrated at KONGO BAY in order to be in a position to save KISII Station if hard pressed and on the 30th January 1908 I had concentrated on the KONGO KISII line 230 men available to make a forced march if necessary and thus clear up the KISII Station difficulty. On this date I received information that the Station was safe.

operations.

- V. On the 31st January 1908 I arrived with my main Column now made up to 280 rifles on the border of the affected territory and immediately commenced active operations, dividing my force up into small columns, covering a frontage of about 10 miles. I drove the enemy in front of me towards KISII Station; this movement came as a complete surprise to the enemy as on all former occasions when any armed parties moved to the Government Station, they invariably followed what was considered the main road or rather track and never diverged across country.

(8) 70

The enemy suffered heavily and in this days operations my Columns captured many head of stock and burnt many dwellings and cattle stockades.

Our tactics on this day so demoralized the enemy that he did not make any combined effort to dispute our march on any future occasion.

During this days operations although the KIBII appeared in great force on the surrounding hills they did not make any combined attack and were easily driven off by a few well directed volleys and a few rounds fired from the maxims.

theatre of operations.

VI. As several of the KIBII Clans were not actually hostile to the Government and refrained from actual rebellion, the area of active operations only covered some 400 to 500 square miles and was very difficult to operate in owing to the long elephant grass which grew in the valleys and to a dense scrub and tall cultivation which covered the higher ground, all hill tops where the grass was short were the only positions from which a good view could be got, besides a long escarpment ran through the country, gave us an extended view and from which the friendly Clans could be located.

The aspect as mentioned above favoured in every way the enemy's tactics as it gave cover for his stock and very difficult and good hiding places for the warriors, but at the same time made it most difficult for the Troops to move and keep touch in.

ing the road to KONGO BAY and bring in the convoy not strongly guarded, so that I may justly say that their efforts throughout were great.

IX. From the date I commenced active operations to the end of the expedition on 6th February 1900, the enemy suffered heavily.

They lost over 7000 cattle captured and 3000 sheep & goats were taken, many living and cattle bones were burnt while over 500 casualties were inflicted on the enemy who were completely demoralized fleeing with their families into the KAVIRONDO country for personal safety.

During the operations our loss was trifling, only one HANDI Levy wounded.

I attribute our small casualty return to the fact that very few native Levies were employed and that all raiding parties sent out from the Main Column, were of sufficient strength to cope with any hostile bodies of the enemy they came in contact with by a few well directed volleys or rifle fire and that the enemy used no bows and arrows, also when encountered in main force, they were so closely pressed by the troops that they had no opportunity to concentrate.

X. I attribute the speedy and successful results of the operations to the keenness displayed by all ranks and to the loyal support I received from both Civil and Military Officers which represented both the 1st and 2nd Battalions King's African Rifles and also to the splendid marching powers of the native soldier although burdened as he was, with 7 days rations, blanket, equipment etc.

transport XI. Porter transport was used throughout; they were all recruited from the WAKAVIRONDO tribes around KISUMU and MURIAS and on the whole worked well but they could only carry a 40 lb load which necessitated a large force and in consequence longer columns to guard in the line of march.

medical XII. The medical arrangements were all that could be desired. The Medical Officer in his report states the health of the Force was excellent.

supply XIII. A ration of rice was carried for the Troops but this was often diverted from and a local flour ration substituted which was of excellent quality. Porters were rationed on flour collected in the areas from which they were recruited.

discipline XIV. The discipline of the Troops was excellent.

The discipline of the Police was not good (see Mr. [Name] Report attached). This, I consider, from years' experience of Africans is attributed to the fact that both N. O. and men were not sufficiently trained or disciplined before they are placed in the ranks to act as a military element.

Difficulties XV. The District Engineer Uganda Railway blocked the line at FORT TERRAN and delayed a Troop Train and apparently the same train was delayed at LONDIANI for some unknown reason, vide my Staff Diary of 20-1-1908.

Re Equipment: XVI. The present pouch supplied with the Equipment is not of a useful pattern; the cover is not sufficient to prevent cartridges falling out when men are operating in thick bush country or lying down with the pouches full of ammunition.

Conclusion. XVII. In conclusion I would most respectfully request you will be good enough to bring to His Excellency the Governor's notice that I am of opinion that African General Service Medal with a Clasp inscribed "KISII 1908" should be granted to all Officers, Commissioned-Officers and men under my Command who took part in the expedition from 16th January to February 1908.

Confidential XVIII. I have the honour to enclose in a letter a confidential letter giving the names of the Natives, Officers, Non-commissioned-Officers and men whose services, I consider, worthy to be brought to the notice of His Excellency the Governor.

I have the Honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient Servant

Enemies casualties 7 killed.

January Lieut de Carteret with 20 rifles left camp at 5.30 a.m. to meet Capt Stigand and report him into camp.

20 No. 3 returned to camp yesterday from the east. They reported his arrival at the headquarters camp today. He was accompanied by 20 rifles, 10 No. 3, 20 No. 3, and 20 rifles. From Kisii Point the report returned to Kisii Point in the afternoon.

Capt Stigand had not yet the escort, but to meet him under Lieut de Carteret, which returned here at sunset.

Captain Stigand reports an encounter with the Kitutu near the church between Kogonko Bay and Kisii Point on 25th January.

Estimate of the enemies casualties at 10 killed.

Dugun

Organ and his people and Ngekundi, Hainan headman with his people came in today to have an interview with the C.P.O. They want peace and state they have committed no hostile acts.

This so far as is known is true.

They maintain that Kibetia is inclined to overextend and does not want to go any further.

They confirm the report that the witch woman is at the bottom of the trouble.

Operations will be directed to destroy and drive to the north of the coast Kibetia.

The column marched today at 8:30 a.m. in a N.W. direction and after a two hours march reached Eduvia territory where it was met by Eduvia himself who handed over 60 head of cattle which he had seized from the Kibetia.

After another hours march along a good road led broad out by Eduvia people we camped at Mbaranga. Distance 24 miles.

We crossed three streams named Mbaranga, Nye onite and Mbaranga. Eventually join to gether and form the Kibetia river.

Eduvia villages are much larger than those met with in other parts of the colony and are surrounded with walls about 6' high and 12" wide built of mud and small stones. There is a ditch about 12" deep and 12" wide around the walls.

The walls are built of mud and small stones. There is a ditch about 12" deep and 12" wide around the walls.

100 Kibetia men have been hired for the C.P.O. to assist in driving the cattle.

No company under Captain Gode, accompanied by Mr. Rensted A.P.O. moved out to the N.W. and swept along the hill destroying Kibetia villages.

This company rejoined the column at sunset and brought in a large number of captured cattle and reported

Lieut. Storey with the III Company reached station 3.47 P.M. on 1st January. Mr. Moran A.D. was on this patrol with Captain Grimsby captured

95 head of cattle } approximately 300 sheep and goats }

Mr. Stocker A.P.O. at Kongo Bay reports that he has captured

500 head of cattle } approximately 300 sheep and goats } approximately 30 Kisi killed and wounded.

Further orders sent to Capt. Grimsby orders him to march to headquarters camp with all captured stock leaving Lieut. Storey with his half company at Kisi station.

This report from Captain Grimsby renders an alteration in our plans necessary and a postponement of the drive from the Kuni valley until JANUARY 10th. We have been taught a lesson and the safety of the KISI - KONGO BAY route assured.

Half a Company with the Landwehr Levies will proceed to Kericho with the captured stock.

Half a Company will remain at Kisi.

This will leave headquarters with two companies to move against Nohari and Omande.

Headquarters will move to Kericho camp as soon as Lieut. Storey returns from his patrol on the Kericho road.

From Kericho half a company will be dispatched to the K. of K. (Kisi village).

Half a company to Kericho Hill.

In conjunction with Lieut. Storey's half company at Kisi which will move out to the north, the whole of the force will then move out to the north and parties making a base at Omande camp their point of attack.

Headquarters will be at Kericho. Colonel will be at Kericho.

meanwhile march for Oweya camp along the top of the escarpment.

February

Headquarters remain at Ndavis.
Orders received from Principal Medical Officer that Sergeant Taylor R.A.M.C. is to return to Nairobi. Asst Surgeon, [unclear] taking his place as dispenser. Lieuts Sladen and Fitzgerald with 1 No 3 Company joined headquarters camp on completion the building of cattle pens at Keryenge and Kitero in preparation for [unclear].

February

The column retraced its steps from Ndavis camp to Kocoko camp arriving at the latter place at 7.00 P.M.

Captain Gordon with 1 No 3 Company remained at Ndavis camp village to await the arrival of the captured stock, when he is to drive it to Kericho, where he will hand it over to the detachment of police or Ist [unclear] which the C.O. R.A. force has requested. His Excellency the Governor may be posted there to guard the cattle, and return to head quarter camp as quickly as possible.

In the event of Captain Gordon not finding such a detachment at Kericho when he arrives there, he with his half Company will remain at that place and guard the cattle until such time as he may be relieved.

50 loads had to be left behind in charge of Ndavi [unclear] to lack of beasts for transportation.

At [unclear]'s village the main column met [unclear] under Captain [unclear] escorting the captured stock from Kisii to Ndavi's village.

From this place, Lieut Fitzgerald with 1 No III Coy and Mr. [unclear] R.A.M.C. was detached from the main column with orders to march to [unclear] village and encamp there for the night as to be in readiness for to-morrow's operations.

Captain Bois with half No 1 Company was also detached with orders to march to Libetis hill and encamp there for the night for the same purpose as above. The captured stock having been handed over to the section of No 7 Coy. and the Lumber Levies with orders to drive it to Hrovis. The remaining half of No 1 Coy. joined the main column and marched with it to Hrovis.

At 3 a.m. orders were despatched to Lieut. Storey at Kisil to the effect that he and his half Coy. were to be in position on the hill to the N. of and 1 1/2 miles from Kisil station at 8 a.m. on the 11th, so as to co-operate with the column from Hrovis and Libetis and also the headquarters column from Bogonko.

The disposition of the troops on the evening of the 3rd was as follows:-

At Headquarters: No 7 Coy. & No 1 Coy. at Bogonko
Lieut. Fitzgerald with No 3 Coy. at or adjacent to Hrovis.

Capt. Bois	"	1	"	1	"	Libetis
Lieut. Storey	"	1	"	1	"	Kisil station
Capt. Gordon	"	1	"	1	"	Hrovis

These columns with the exception of the last, which is under orders to proceed to Hrovis with the captured stock, will move simultaneously to-morrow at 8 a.m. in the direction of Hrovis, each carrying all stock and gun available during the night with the exception of the gun which will be held in order and their respective orders.

Mr. Thimberpe last evening joined the column today. Vice-Capt. Taylor R.A.M.C.

February 11. At 8 a.m. the headquarters column moved out of the camp and advanced in the direction of Kisil station along the top of the escarpment.

At 8:30 a.m. a column of smoke was observed rising from Libetis hill to the north of Kisil station.

and about 7 miles away, this was doubtless Capt. Pois' & Company but we failed to get into signalling communication with him.

At 9 A.M. the people in the valley immediately before us were observed to be driving out their cattle.

There were Arambo's people who before the commencement of operations against the Kisi had thrown a police guard over the escarpment.

Sections were at once sent out to the plain & left down into the valley to endeavour to capture this stock.

The headquarter column after waiting for about an hour descended into the valley and marched straight for Okey's camp, which it reached about 1.15 P.M.

Soon after resuming camp communication was obtained with Lieut. Fitzgerald's column which had operated from Mbe-tis. Nothing had been seen or heard of Lieut. Sorey's column, which was to have cooperated from Kisi station.

All the troops were concentrated in Okey's camp by 4.30 P.M. with the exception of the column from Kisi and a sergeant and few men of Capt. Pois' Column. These latter arrived in camp at about 8 P.M.

The result of the day's operations was as follows.

Cattle captured	537
Sheep & Goats	200
Animals casualties	38 killed & mangled
Our casualties	Nil.

Heavy rain & hail storm about 4 P.M. February Lieut. Widen, with one section as escort, was dispatched to Kongo Bay, with 300 unloaded porters, to bring up all stores from that place to Okey's camp.

Mr. Armitstead with 1/2 platoon and 20 N.C.B. was sent to Kisi station to remove all stores to this camp. He also took with him 300 sheep with which to pay off off the ~~...~~ levies.

 A.D.S.P. Foran with an escort of police arrived from Kisumu station about 8 a.m. to see the C.P.O. He informed me that Lieut Storey had not received any orders of the 3rd instant, which accounts for his failing to cooperate with the other columns yesterday. It appears that the letter containing the orders was received in Kisumu at 8 p.m. on the 3rd by the A.D.C. but that the seal on the envelope had become indistinct and that he had read Capt Bois for Lieut Storey and had placed the letter in one aide's hands to await the former officer's return. The C.P.O. had been written to on the subject.

Original, the friendly chief who captured and handed over to us the man who bore Mr. Northcote, arrived in camp and reported that in the course of yesterday's operations, his own village was burnt, some of his people killed and stock taken. Steps are being taken to verify this statement.

At 1.30 p.m. Capt Bois and Mr. Remsted returned from investigating this matter and reported that one man only was killed, who was armed with spear and shield that no cattle had been taken but that 18 mats were burnt. The C.P.O. has decided to recompense Onguen for the burnt mats.

This evening the C.P.O. received a despatch from the C.P.O. requesting the suspension of hostilities.

The force accordingly return to Nairobi and demobilize.

February Masud Mtendi with one section No V Coy. sent to Ndoo via to bring up the 50 loads left there.

Mr. Northcote A.P.O. and Dr. Rodden P.M.O. with an escort of police arrived in camp to-day from Kisumu and returned there at 11 p.m.

Captain Stigand Survey Officer has been struck off the strength of the force - 7 days date, as the force is now to discontinue.

Lieut Bladen with a convoy returned from Lago Bay camp to-day at 4.30 p.m.

Wire received from His Excellency the Governor at 11.30 p.m. 1st Lt. Miller has been despatched to the area as general to settle there and that Lieut Bladen was to proceed there to command it.
Captains Grimshaw and Bois with No 1 Coy. will remain at Okoye when the column returns to the base to garrison the Kisii District until such time as the authorities may consider sufficient order has been restored to allow of the Military element being withdrawn.

A telegram from ^{His Excellency} ~~the Governor~~ received expressing regret at the ^{number} ~~number~~ of casualties suffered by the Kisii and pointing out that every effort should be attended whenever possible. Further that operations were to be brought to a speedy close.

February - Headquarter staff with the exception of the S.C. A. d's branch marched from Okoye camp today arriving about 2 miles beyond Karackwoyo camp at 3 p.m. and were camped.

February - Headquarters staff, accompanied by Wainwright
C.S.O., C.P.O. arrived at Kisumu.
The Inspector-General, K.A.R. and Major Pope-Hennessy
Staff Officer, arrived by train from Nairobi
Naivasha en route for Uganda

February - The Inspector-General K.A.R. and Major Pope-Hennessy
S. O. left for Entebbe by the 4.15 train.
Captain F.R. Hayes Cadles, Special Survey Officer to the K.A.R. joined the S.O.'s staff and proceeded to Entebbe.

Lieut

Lieut. de Carteret and Dr. Vays M.O. left by the down train the further to proceed to England on leave of absence, the latter to report himself to the P.M.O. at Nairobi on completion of his duties with the Kisumu Expeditionary Force.

In February Captain Bailey with 14 companies arrived in Kisumu from Mombasa Bay at 8.0 P.M. At 8.0 A.M. the troops train left for Nairobi with the U.C., S.O.A., Lieut. Sladen, P.O. and No 321 Company under Lieut. Storey and Fitzgerald. Lieut. Sladen left the train at Lushwa, from whence he proceeds to Mericho to take over charge of the cattle ward.

At 6.30 P.M. the 2nd troop train left Kisumu for Nairobi with Captain Bailey, S.O.A.'s branch Lieut. Offmeister, 1st Officer, 1st Lieutenant P.O. Kinross, Sgt Major Boyce and No 5 Company.

The remaining 1/2 of No 5 Company was entrained at Lushwa.

Captain Gordon remains at that place to close the station.

In February The troops arrived at Nairobi and the force was demobilized.

I have received information from Mr. Remsted that the whole of the fighting men of the Kitutu clan with their cattle are on the escarpment and between that and the Kuja River. The Kuja River is surrounded with swamps and it is unlikely that the enemy will attempt to cross it.

Jan 25th

Mr. Remsted's information leads me to believe that the enemy will not move far from where they are now reported to be.

A list of the Kisiit clans with their headmen is attached in Appendix K. Ndube or Ndui (vide para 3) is a Mugarangu a subtribe of the Kitutu.

The information received today confirms that in para 13.

The Kitutu clan comprises about half of the whole of the Kisiit tribe and could put about 2,000 - 10,000 spears into the field.

We are encamped at Hoppa.

Jan 26th

Ndube's territory reported two hours march from here. He is friendly and has captured from the Kitutu who attempted to enter district. This stock he wishes to hand over to Government. The Kitutu are hiding with their cattle to the S.E.

Large herds of cattle are reported to have been seen in that direction by the station which was sent out there this afternoon.

25. One of the Ndubi's men came in to see the C.F.O. this morning also bringing from Ndubi, either of the following men.

Notes on the Klai were taken down by me to-day on information received from the C.F.O. from Mr. Kambet, A.S.O. and various natives.

These notes will be found in appendix K.

26. The Raja River from where Captain Gordon and Mr. Kambet saw it yesterday on the far side of the escarpment would appear to be about 50' wide and 3' deep. A fast running stream. Its general direction South Westerly. The right bank is steep and the left bank gently rising. For a great part of its course it flows through swamps, but is not very difficult to cross. This escarpment is called the MUKA escarpment which terminates on the far side within sight of KERICIS.

The C.F.O. interviewed ANGEN, headman of the MUKA section of the NIGBU.

It appears that he himself was taken no active part in the outbreak and was afraid to come in as some of his people had joined the non-

27. He believes that a witch doctor is at the bottom of the trouble and made medicine by means of which Northcote was to die and the Government driven out of the country. ANGEN is anxious to obey Government orders.

28. The C.P.O. also interviewed 2 headmen of OMUOGA'S, where people had at the beginning of the disturbance thrown a police askari over the Mangi encampment.

29. They professed themselves anxious for peace & are ready to undergo such punishment as the C.P.O. may see fit to inflict for the murder of the police askari.

30. OMUOGA'S himself was unfortunately shot by our men yesterday. I saw unfortunately because it appears he was on his way into camp to see the C.P.O. when he was shot.

It seems as if the KIRIRO are getting rather despondent and wish for peace.

The C.P.O. is interviewing their chief to-morrow to discuss the situation and pending the result of the interview no active operations will take place.

31. Omogwa and Nyakundi headmen of Kalipi came in Jan 28th to see the C.P.O. to-day. Many of their people accompany them. They paid about Rs 1,000 in hut tax and brought in fuel for the expedition.

They confirm the information that the witch woman is responsible for the whole trouble.

That witch's people are the only ones who Nyakundi does not think they will come in.

Kibetis villages are situated about 3 miles to the N. from camp on a ridge running roughly East and West.

State the Kibizi's cattle have moved into Ndavis country whilst a certain amount are still within reach of this camp.

The witch woman is living with Ndavis people.

The man who steered Nostacote, is a slave of the witch woman and has fled and is living with the Kavirondo.

Received information that on the 26th Jani Capt. Stigand was on the march from Kibizi to Kisumu. Information was received that Kibizi were driving cattle from the direction of the Government towards Mbatia territory. On investigating this the cattle were observed. Kavirondo friendly were sent out to see what they were doing about 100 of the Kibizi extended order directed down the hill but on being met by rifle fire from the police fled driving back the majority of their cattle with them. Numbers were estimated at 50 killed.

The situation seems to have narrowed down to the following:

That Kibizi people should not be our objective.

They may have done any of the following things.

1. Driven their cattle into Mbatia territory.

2. Driven the into the thick country to the S.

3. Are hiding their herds amongst friendly Kavirondo.

Received information that attempts of the Government to intercept and to be successful on.

The village of Kibizi and his chiefs are exceedingly anxious to help Government and offer services of 2500 Kiloren, 250 Kiloren regarding the incident.

Informed that Kavirondo are sheltering some of the Kibizi herds.

That Kibatis people are moving that way.

Received information that a convoy when on the road between Kungo Bay and Kisii on the 23rd was attacked close to the Kibatis villages. The convoy opened fire and killed two of the Kisii who upon that remainder fled.

Many cattle were observed in this location.

The attack was probably delivered by:

1. Kibatis people from the district in which the attack probably took place.
2. Kibatis people who may be living in the borders of Kavirondo.

Received information that Kibatis people and their cattle are hiding amongst the Kavirondo.

That the Majors (Majors) have made two attacks on Kisii where they have built a station, whether for the cattle or as a defensive measure is uncertain.

The Kibatis are not now grazing their herds on Kungo, only two parties which the Majors can recross the hills if they wish to break down into the valley.

Reports received from O. K. M. F. Coy. at Kisii at 8:00 P.M. today state that during the Kisii - Kungo Bay road on the 23rd about 200 Kisii close to the Kibatis became engaged and killed 21 of the enemy. The enemy showed great determination and did not give way even when subjected to a heavy fire from Maxim.

Kongo Bay at 3.30 p.m. saying he had captured about 500 head of cattle, 800 sheep & goats.

Reports numerous thousands of cattle crossing to the N.E. into Kavirondo country.

Another 100 Mandi levies have arrived at Kongo Bay.

Iberis and Omaniya people appear to have returned to their villages and are engaged in attacking convoys on the Kisii-Kongo Bay road.

Information received at S. M. today that Capt. Ongwen has brought in the man who appeared to Mr. Northcote and handed him over to the civil authorities at Kisii station.

That Mawnda has gone in to Kisii station and begged for peace.

Information re satisfactory attitude of Lumbwa, Kurel and Sotik people further confirmed.

The road to Kericho crosses the Sondo River about 9 miles from Ndavia. The crossing is good with a strong bottom. Water about knee deep stream fast about 30' wide. The ascent to the Kericho side is very hard for cattle in places almost precipitous.

From Ndavia to Kiryandaga is about 16 miles. Kericho reported about 5-6 hours march from Ndavia.

After crossing the Sondo River you get into Lumbwa territory.

A Lumbwa patrol is grading the crossing. Heavy rain and hail about 4 p.m.

Kibeti is believed to be hiding in the Nyabundia villages.

Can get no confirmation of the report that the majority of fighting men and cattle have crossed the Ruja river and are on Munga hill.

7. Very few people and cattle observed in Kibeti and Ogeya districts. Are believed to have fled into Kavirondo.

The C. I. O. has requested the O. O. K. F. to suspend hostilities as he is of opinion that the Nivris have been sufficiently punished and are thoroughly demoralized.

Intelligence on the KISSI Tribe.

- I. The country inhabited by the KISSI tribe is roughly about 1,200 to 2,000 square miles. Bounded on the north by KAVIROBO tribes East by LUMWA and BURUT South by KAVIRAK & LUMWA MASAI West by KAVIROBO.

population

The population of the country is from 50,000 to 40,000 souls; this number is liberal but as the country is densely inhabited, I consider the above a reasonable census.

clans

3. The tribe is divided up into several clans; these clans are not in any way united but act independently under the orders of their chieftains. The KISSI tribe is supposed to be the remnants of the ancient SERIWA people who at one time held the whole of MANDI and the GUASINRUISHO plateau until expelled by the MANDI and MASSAI tribes.

They are intermarried both with the LUMWA and KAVIROBO.

number of fighting men

- 4. I estimate that if the whole KISSI tribe united some 8,000 to 10,000 fighting men could be put into the field, but owing to the constant internal feuds this is not in the least probable. The warriors are generally armed with spears and shields only, they use their bow and arrows. The spear handle is a ~~very~~ shaft similar to the KAVIROBO. Their shields are made of a rather high order. This is a fact that they have seen as yet practically nothing of the effect of modern fire arms.

Local Govt. 5. There is very little authority held by the Chieftains and the inhabitants of villages only consider their headman. There is one exception to this A clan in the North West of KISSI country is governed by a chief named NUVI who has considerable authority and this section is very important.

6. The KISSI clans are in no way similar in their mode of living: the various clans have different ways, according to the size of the clan but the following may be taken as a guide.

- a. Some clans live in walled villages with a ditch and thorn fence outside.
- b. Other villages are simply surrounded with a thorn fence only.
- c. Scattered houses on the hill sides.
- d. The chief lives with his clan.

Deductions.

- a. The tribe, not knowing the effect of modern arms, will keep their families and stock in their villages while the warriors will attack the columns while moving through their country
- b. Try and secure their families and stock in LUMBA, BURST and KAVIRONDO (this is not to be considered likely as BURST know the effect of SOTIN Expedition, and LUMBA had a lesson in seeing their friends the KANDI punished, the KAVIRONDO are friendly to Government and send their warriors to attack the columns.

Net result of the operations in Kisii up to the 5th February, on which the G. O. requested the O. G., E. S. F. to suspend hostilities.

1. The Kikuyu clan which has revolted has been severely punished and is demoralized.
2. The enemy have suffered over 200 casualties, as far as can be ascertained.
3. Over 7000 of their cattle have been captured, and some 5000 sheep and goats.
4. The man who spared Mr. Northcote is now in the hands of the Government.
5. A number of huts have been burnt, also cattle bomas.
6. It is to be hoped that the punishment meted out to the Kikuyu has had and will have for the future the effect of ^{showing} the neighbouring tribes and clans that the Government can and will punish all wrong doers.
7. The prestige of the witch woman has been considerably lessened in the eyes of the Kisii.

MEDICAL SERVICES REPORT
MISSI EXPEDITIONARY FORCE.

The general health of the troops through out the campaign was excellent. The prevailing diseases were chiefly Malaria. Local outbreaks of Dysentery all being trivial in character. Four cases of Pneumonia were treated at the Base Hospital, and all recovered.

Amongst the Officers only one case of a mild attack of Dysentery was treated.

The list of sick reports during the campaign is attached.

Monquitos are met in swampy localities. Both the Culex and Anopheles were observed.

I wish to mention that the Medical Services rendered by Doctor Leys, Assistant Surgeon Thirskery and Dispenser Taylor were carried out in a most satisfactory and excellent manner; and I have to thank them all for their generous assistance throughout the campaign.

and must cease when the objects above noted are obtained.atives may to 181. the disaffected class should be interfered with as little as possible. I could suggest that strict instructions be issued to the officers & men not to interfere and as possible with the food supplies of the country they pass through: the present is a time of emergency and we must avoid having to deal with the possibilities of a famine later on if this can be avoided.

5. As to the particular class against whom it will be necessary to operate you will be guided, as in other matters which come within his province, by the advice of the Chief Political Officer.

I trust that order may be restored within a very short time of the arrival of the troops in the Kisii district and that you will then be able to withdraw them with the exception of the Company which is quartered at Lambara, which it is advisable should be stationed at Kisii for some time to come.

In Camp

February 25th 1908.

Sir,

On the termination of hostilities in the Kisii Country and in continuation of my letter of this date I have the honour to inform you that in my opinion the Expedition has achieved the object for which it was mobilized.

The Kitutu section of the Kisii tribe has been utterly demoralized, and have been taught a most severe lesson.

Undoubtedly the prestige of the Government has been maintained in a most striking manner. The presence of an imposing force in the country and the harassing tactics adopted by the troops, has been an object lesson to the Kisii which it will take a long time for them to forget.

I beg to convey to you my sincere appreciation of the way in which the operations have been conducted. I fully understand the difficult position in which at times your Company Commanders were placed owing to certain parts of the enemy's locations being adjacent to friendly locations, it is however satisfactory to know that their forbearance and watchfulness has enabled us to avoid all difficulties.

It would have been a great satisfaction to note that practically no food supplies have been destroyed.

Yours faithfully

Col. J. B. Mackay

Commanding Kisii Expeditionary Force

Kisii

The general result of the punitive measures adopted must necessarily be to impress upon the King and surrounding tribes the fact that the Government is not slow to inflict punishment on a tribe that defies its authority.

For possibly a year it will be necessary to maintain a company of troops in the country in order that the natives may, until such time as they absolutely settle down, be kept to a sense of their obligations as one of the tribes in this Protectorate.

I have the honor to be

Sir,

Your most obedient servant

Sd. John Ainsworth.

Final remarks on the Kisumu Expedition.

The condition of the police which accompanied the expedition can only be described as deplorable. The following extracts from a letter of January 1914 and a letter dated December 1913 speak for themselves.

- a. "That of the six police sent by you to Kungo Bay, all have returned here, but 5 constables of the same are under arrest for refusing to go on guard in camp when escorting the Hospital Assistant from Kungo Bay here.
- b. "The police were hopeless and proved quite unmanageable, refusing to return or cease fire when the bugle sounded."
- c. "Further I do not trust the police and feel obliged to protest against being left with such an incompetent and untrustworthy body of men."

The above extracts are, I think, sufficient to show the state of the police.

It must be noted that these extracts are from a letter written by a police officer.

This would have been avoided had the District Officer complied with the instructions sent to him by the Traffic Manager. Whilst as it was the delay did not affect the expedition, it will have had the most serious consequences.

On the whole worked satisfactorily. The only difficulty, i.e., that of securing a long string of porters closed when on the march - was experienced

The signalling work was, I consider, well carried out though difficult times, experienced in maintaining communication between posts owing to the prevalence of a thick haze during the day.

Just over 9000 rounds were expended inclusive of Maxim Gun ammunition.

Taking the enemies casualties at 300, this gives a percentage of 2 hits per 100 rounds, which may be regarded as a satisfactory result.

The fire discipline was good and the N.C.Os kept their men well in hand.

REPORT BY THE PROVINCIAL COMMISSIONER, KISUMU, TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR ON THE KISUMU KISILI REBELLION, AND ITS SUPPRESSION.

PART I.

On Sunday the 13th January 1905 a special messenger arrived from the Assistant District Commissioner (Mr NORTHCOOTE) with information that a Native belonging to the KISUMU Clan of KISILI had written this Officer in an attempt to murder him. Mr NORTHCOOTE in his letter stated that he wished it to be clearly understood that the matter was not a tribal affair, it being, in his opinion, a matter in which an individual whose he had fined had attempted to carry out private vengeance.
A doctor was despatched from here early on the morning of the 13th to attend to Mr NORTHCOOTE.

I decided to visit KISILI with a military Patrol and enquire into the matter and with this object in view, asked Your Excellency to sanction by employing 50 R.A.F.
with an European Officer from LUMBA. Before the Patrol arrived here however, I received further information from KISILI to the effect that the whole of the KISUMU Clan had risen against the Government. This information came to hand on Tuesday the 14th January, and on receipt of the news I instructed the Assistant District Superintendent of Police (Mr FURAN) to take all available Police and send a strong force to KISILI

Mr FURAN left at 3 p.m. on the 14th January with time I wired to the O.C. Troops LUMBA, requesting him to send forward without delay the 50 men asked for with an

Capt BOIS with 60 K.A.R. arrived from LAHWA on the night of the 14th and proceeded by land to KISUMU on January 15th. These advance parties were instructed to proceed with all despatch to KISUMU and on arrival there to safeguard life and property.

They were not to undertake any offensive operations apart from their instructions, i. e. they were not to do anything to the natives unless attacked pending the arrival of the O. C. Troops and the Military Expedition. These instructions were, I eventually found out, obeyed in every way.

Establishment of Camp at KONGO BAY.

On Thursday the 16th, I despatched Mr STOKES, Assistant District Commissioner with Inspector FITZGERALD, 16 Police and a number of porters to form a Base Camp at KONGO BAY, and Mr DEACON, Assistant District Commissioner was made local Transport Officer at KISUMU to recruit porters and forward loads. To assist in the work of transport, I found it necessary to employ the Railway Steam tug "Fercy Anderson" and two lighters to keep up communication between KISUMU and KONGO BAY.

Lt. Colonel HACKETT with Officers and troops arrived at KISUMU on Saturday the 18th January and proceeded to KONGO BAY on Sunday the 19th. Major KIRKPATRICK, Chief Staff Officer with a further number of Officers and men of the K.A.R. arrived here early on Monday morning, the 20th January and left for KONGO BAY. I went on with the party and joined the Expedition as Chief Political Officer in accordance with your instructions.

and some 500 porters and followers left the Base Camp at 6.30 a.m. on 31st January.

The expedition arrived in the unfriendly country on the 22nd when armed natives were seen everywhere. Punitive measures were then demanded and before nightfall a considerable number of cattle was captured and brought into camp.

In undertaking the first day's operations the troops were employed in three columns. These tactics were evidently quite unexpected by the KISII who consequently became greatly demoralized. Personally I believe that the first day's operations were responsible for the almost entire collapse of any fighting qualities which the KISII fighting men may have had, certain it is, however, that after the first day they showed no inclination to again face any of the fighting columns. Afterwards they attempted to cut off the cattle from the convoys but never with success.

We arrived at KISII Station on the 24th and found the people right through the Station hostile. We were however not molested.

On the 24th and 25th I remained at KISII while columns were sent out to look for and seize cattle. Mr A. V. HENKOTE, the District Commissioner of KASHU, who on hearing of the accident to Mr HENKOTE made a forced march from KASHU to KISII, leaving the former Station on the 18th and arriving at the latter on the 14th. This Officer was at KISII on my arrival, and on my learning from the Medical Officer that Mr HUSKOTTE was quite unfit for duty, and in accordance with Your Excellency's instructions, Mr HUSKOTTE joined the Assistant Political Officer; he was utilized in accompanying the Column and in this capacity rendered most useful service. I beg to specially bring this Officer's name before you on account of the services rendered. He was not only most useful, but was also most tactful and exercised most sound judgment, and a ready comprehension of his duties.

On the 30th January the whole of the expedition less half a Company of K.A.R. and the whole of the Police Force then in KISII which remained at KISII Station to look after the cattle and guard the Station, left for the MANGA ESCARPMENT. We reached HEBWICHU Camp the same day when two Columns were sent to the North and East returning in the course with cattle.

On the afternoon of the same day I learnt that two divisions viz; ANGUIN'S and MAINHA'S of the KITURU Clan desired to disassociate themselves from the remainder of the sections then in revolt. As I learnt that these two sections had committed no specific act of violence and were only concerned to the extent of joining generally with the other sections, and as they had already suffered some loss in cattle, I arranged to visit the locations next day. In the meantime the Officer Commanding suspended operations as far as these locations were concerned. On the 27th, I proceeded, accompanied by O.C. Troops, the Assistant Political Officer and four other Military Officers into the KITHN valley to meet ANGUIN who in due course came to the meeting place. The result of the meeting was satisfactory. We then proceeded to East MAINHA and his people with a similar result to the meeting with ANGUIN. On the 28th ANGUIN and MAINHA with their representative Headman and many followers came to our camp with food, and discussed questions generally to our mutual satisfaction. They also brought a portion of their Hut that which the District Commissioner (MR HIRSTON) received.

On the 29th we left for the HEGARANGU (North) location and were there met by friendly Chiefs. HEGARANGU is just outside of the KIRIPIU area. On the 30th we proceeded to HIAVI's and here the natives were extremely friendly and assisted us in every way possible. The Column remained at HIAVI's during the 31st January and the 1st and 2nd February, during which time arrangements were completed for sending in all the captured stock in hand to that late at KISIIHO which is three days distant from HIAVI's.

Instructions had been sent by the C.C. to have the stock left at KISII Station brought on to this Camp.

All these arrangements were carried out successfully.

On the 2nd of February I received information from KISII Station that a convoy while proceeding from the Station to KONGO BAY under Police escort had been attacked by the KISII or HATARA, and so we decided to proceed to that location where we arrived on the 4th. We succeeded in surprising some of the enemy's live stock en route which was brought into camp. The O.N. by an enveloping movement succeeded in completely defeating any further idea of resistance by this section.

On the afternoon of the 5th the Elder ANGUIN came into camp from his location and informed me that the revolted Clans of the KINNHU had by now received a severe lesson and that most of them were anxious to make peace. I had already received information from the Station that two other Elders were making overtures, and an ANGUIN had captured and handed over the man who admitted to murder Mr. NORTHWOODS. I considered it desirable to bring the operations to an end, and on the evening of the 5th, therefore, I informed the Officer Commanding Troops that active operations could cease from that date. I attach copy of my letter to the O.C.

The net results of the operations have been as follows:-

- (1) All the hostile sections of the KINNHU Clan have been punished.
- (2) Just over 7000 head of cattle were captured.
- (3) Some 5000 sheep and goats captured.
- (4) A number of living huts and cattle pens burned (only the worse or more involved sections were treated in this manner,) but in the aggregate not much damage was done in this connection.
- (5) The number of the enemy killed is difficult even to estimate. The Military Authorities put it at 240. It is quite possible however, that this is an over-estimate.

The effect of the operations of the M.A. has undoubtedly been most wholesome. They have learnt a lesson which they have long undoubtedly needed, and which they in every way asked for.

The moral aspect of the operations on the neighboring clans of the KIKI and upon the surrounding Tribes will be official, and I anticipate that for a long time the general peace in the District concerned and the districts adjacent will not be disturbed.

In concluding this part of my report, I would like to be allowed to place on record my sincere appreciation of the cordial sympathy and co-operation extended to me by Lt. Col. MACKAY and all the Officers under his Command. This good feeling made it a comparatively easy matter for me to deal with the various questions and positions that always arise in affairs of this description.

My thanks are also due to Mr FORAN, Assistant District Superintendent of Police for his willing assistance rendered at all times; and both Mr STOKES and Mr DRACON carried out their respective duties most satisfactorily.

Part II

The Kisii Revolt - Its causes and was employ-to investi-

the cause.

On my arrival in Kisii I enquired as fully as possible into the cause of the Kitutu revolt, and on subsequent occasions I made every possible endeavour to find substantiation for previous statements made. I obtained very full information from such elders as DEVI, DILATCH, NYAMOSI, CHORI, MALONGA and NYATI who have been friendly throughout, and from ANGUIS, MAINHA, MWYIKUMBI and MUKIAB who became friendly subsequently. Independent of the foregoing, I also questioned certain prisoners brought into camp. The result of my investigations made it perfectly clear that the following are the causes which have led to the revolt:-

dispos-

The Kisii country lies away from all near intercourse with the outside world. It is practically surrounded by other tribes with whom, more or less, the Kisii have been continually on bad terms.

The Kitutu clan of the Kisii tribe is, if anything, more isolated than the other clans. This clan has quarrels with all the remaining Kisii clans and also with the Kavirondo and Kamba, and on various occasions in the past succeeded on various occasions in raiding other clans of Kisii. They are reported to have only once penetrated into the Kitutu valley, when they were severely defeated and left the greater part of their party dead in the valley. These and other similar causes gave the Kitutu clan an apparently predominant influence in the Kisii affairs, and made them feared.

Amongst the Kavirondo the Kisii had a name for great ferocity and were greatly feared, which was that, whereas the Kisii continually raided the Kavirondo, the latter never dared enter the Kisii country. There is no doubt but that these points alone caused the Kisii, and more especially the Kitutu clan, to have a considerable estimate of themselves.

The Kisii generally and the Kitutu in particular are believed to be descended from a witch who lived in Kitutu. This witch who is a woman has the reputation of making medicines for good or evil.

Kisii practically do not intercourse with any of the tribes who live in the area, and speak a different language to the Kavirondo and the Nilotic tribes of their other frontiers (the Kisii speak undoubtedly a Bantu dialect). These people are not in a position to know of the Government, its power or resources: in fact they appear to know nothing of any of the existence of any authority apart from what they understood existed at Kisii Station itself.

Certainly the expedition under Captain Jenkins had visited parts of the country in 1906 and had punished certain sections. These sections, principally WANJARI with the exception of MARIANI (Muyumbani's) held aloof from the present revolt. There is however evidence to show that any neutrality was more due to the desire to see how the rebel clan was dealt with in the first instance than from any other idea of loyalty, especially all the so-called friendly clans sheltered stores and people of the revolted Kitutu. This is a feature however, very common in such cases and one not to be surprised at.

When Mr. Northcote commenced early this year to establish a Station in Kisii, he selected a site on the south the South end of the Kitutu clan and immediately adjoining their location. It appears that from the start the Kitutu people became suspicious of our intentions. They made no secret of their dislike to our locating ourselves amongst them, and even went so far apparently as to ask what we wanted. It would appear that either intentionally or through some error of interpretation these enquiries were told that such as the person was feminine. Kavirondo then, North side Malindi, where there was plenty of food for a while. From the morning some of importance seems to have happened. Their date commencement of permence building with them to have started the Kitutu once more. It would then seem to have been divided in their midst; some were for running the Station and others were for following the will of the witch. This is the of the Kitutu seem to have been most frequent and the whole clan were the state of absolute respect. The witch it would have made medicine and know that it was good for the European to die, and it was believed further that the destruction of Kisii was simply a personal matter and would cease for ever with the death of Mr. Northcote. He came the attempt on his life.

The whole of the Kisii tribe is divided into numerous clans. These clans are again divided into families. Each clan and each family is hostile to the other, and so it was evidently a difficult matter for ever the whole of the divisions of the Kitututu to join together even on a matter which they seem to have been unanimous about. Evidently the Medicine woman realized this because she took the first opportunity that presented and ordered her foster son to go out on an occasion when Mr. Northcote was passing through her location and spear him. This act though approved of by the Kitutu section generally, was apparently not anticipated at any at any particular moment; hence before the news could get about to enable the people to meet, Mr. Northcote was safe back at the station. To this want of combination as to the fact that the wounding was simply a matter of chance in the manner described, Mr. Northcote undoubtedly owes his life; for there was no doubt whatever that, had there been time for the people to have got together and intercepted him, they would, in the state of mind they then were, have finished what the witch's sorcery had commenced. After the event some thousands of natives hung round the station for days, and only began to disperse after the arrival of Mr. R.W. Hamsted from Kariakoo.

In a few words it is evident that the Kikuyu did not want a station near them. They resented the white man intruding amongst them. They were extremely ignorant and isolated, and the witch's medicine showed it was bad for them if the European remained, and that it was good for the Kikuyu that he should die.

Mr. Northcote was apparently more or less aware of this state of affairs, but in reply to my queries as to why he never warned the Provincial Commissioner, he replied that he attached very little importance to all the information he received in this connection.

I have made all further enquiries possible with a view of finding out whether any other causes than those already related existed, to account for the hostile feelings. I firmly believe however, that there is nothing.

I consider it a great mistake to leave these outstations with only one officer in charge. It is not fair to the officer concerned. It is against the interests of the Administration; it is offering chances that should not be offered, and such a system is responsible in certain cases for many wrong impressions.

gained by the natives, and also at times for officers becoming narrowed down to the limits of their immediate surroundings and forgetting that their district, but one of the units of the Administration.

When the expedition entered Kinal, I was unable to get much information from Mr. Northcote, and had as a consequence to rely partly on Mr. Hemsted and information from natives.

By working up information and ascending the high escarpment and taking a birds eye view of the country, we soon got all the locations well defined.

In part I of this report I have shown how we got into touch with the Witch and Wichha. The former was responsible for the capture of a native who attempted to murder Mr. Northcote.

we in co-sion with Wichha.

It may possibly be necessary for me to explain my views with regard to the Witch witch. They are as follows:-

I consider she has a great power in the country, but am inclined to think that her authority as at present is practically non-existent. I have said nothing about her to the people and have induced Mr. Hemsted to say nothing either. It is quite possible that if we have any attention to her existence that it might be the cause of the creation of an idea that we had some fear of her medicine, left to herself and the usual anger of leaders of cattle etc., she may have time to realize that her medicine, which the Government is concerned, is not a very powerful mixture. Then if considered desirable she might be captured quietly and moved from the country she has disturbed. If, considered frontier into Kavirondo when numbers were detained by the Kavirondo. The latter are, of course, only getting some of their own back. These incidents, coupled with an idea to regroup themselves for what the expedition took from them, may induce irresponsible members of the Kisi to attempt raids into the Kavirondo and in anticipation of such possibilities the patrols will require to move frequently and at irregular intervals along the boundary.

Certain Chiefs etc., who rendered assistance to the Government in various ways, and Anguin who captured the Kisi who attempted to murder Mr. Northcote have been paid awards out of the captured stock.

Over 200 head of cattle and a number of goats belonging to friendlies seized with the enemy's stock have been returned.

Two or three cases of compensation arose and were settled all amicably.

Part III of my report describes the Kisi country and gives particulars of the population and Resources.

Captain K. S. HAYES, Indian Army 7th Gurkha
Battalion, was attached to my Command for Special Survey work during the Expedition; he rendered me most valuable service during the operations and made a most excellent and useful map of the 1811 country, while working under very busy and unfavourable circumstances. His prepared map was invaluable to me during the expedition.

He has proved himself to be a very skillful topo-grapher.

Lieut. J. H. SHANN, Ist B.A. Rifles, (Rifle Brigade) was my transport Officer during the expedition; he proved himself to be a very keen practical Officer, hard working and showed marked ability in organizing native transport from tribes whose language was most difficult to understand and who never before had any knowledge of organization. It was very noticeable the good work he got out of those natives through his resourcefulness under very trying circumstances.

I do not wish to notice the Uncommissioned Officers for general good work done during the expedition and are worthy of consideration:

Captain J. H. BALLEW, 3rd B.A. (The King's Shropshire Light Infantry),

Captain J. BOIS, 3rd B.A. (The King's Own Royal Lancaster Light Infantry).

I have the honour to bring to notice the name of
No. 2000 Sergeant Major A. R. H. (The King's Own Gurkha Rifles), this is a most capable and hard working Non Commissioned Officer and is worthy of a reward for the excellent hard work he performed during the operations.

Instructions for the Central Exhibitions

DUTIES IN CRISIS

1. In the event of a crisis, the Resident shall be guided by the instructions of the High Commissioner, 1906, and shall exercise the powers conferred upon him by the following sections:

1. It shall be the duty of a Resident to take such measures for the preservation of good order in his Province and to exercise such diplomatic or administrative functions therein as may be practicable in the circumstances of the case, and in execution of such general instructions as he may from time to time receive verbally or in writing from the High Commissioner. In the performance of all or any of such duties, the aforesaid Resident shall have the right to call upon all persons including the military forces of the Protectorate to assist him.

2. In the exercise of the powers given to him by the foregoing section, a Resident

(a) shall not interfere with the interior economy or discipline of any body of troops, or the actual conduct of any military operations,

(b) in the event of armed insurrection or general disturbance, he may, if he deems it necessary, call upon the military forces of the Protectorate to assist him, and he may, if he deems it necessary, call upon the military forces of the Protectorate to assist him, and he may, if he deems it necessary, call upon the military forces of the Protectorate to assist him.

special responsibility if he shall direct the troops to be employed in a manner which the officer may consider open to military objection;

(c) shall forward a report to the High Commissioner under the command of the troops any orders which he may give to any of the said troops, and shall give any orders immediately through the senior military officer present, and shall be responsible for their communication to all officers and troops concerned, and if military operations have been decided upon, shall be liable for their actual conduct;

(d) shall not, in any station or place where the High Commissioner may be present in person, give any orders to troops directly or with the consent of the High Commissioner;

(e) shall, if the High Commissioner is not present in person, when practicable, communicate with the High Commissioner before issuing any such orders.

II. DEFINITION OF EXPEDITION

Expeditions, Patrols, Raids, etc.

Expeditions. The term "Expedition" will only be used to denote military operations carried out with the sanction of the Secretary of State, and denoted as such by the High Commissioner, who will give orders as to the objects and limits of the operations.

Other operations where the assistance of the regular forces is required will be dealt with as follows:

PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE

- (a) Suppression of armed insurrection.
- (b) Suppression of armed disturbances.
- (c) ...
- (d) ...

...armed insurrection. This will be taken into account in the event of a state of rebellion or of open and active interference with the execution of the law by a large proportion of the community under arms, within districts under settled administrative control.

When an armed insurrection actually occurs, it is for the Resident to determine the extent to which troops are to be employed in its suppression. He will consult with the Officers commanding troops, who will state whether he has any military objection to the manner in which the Resident proposes that the troops should be employed; but the ultimate responsibility for their employment rests on the Resident, the military officer's responsibility being limited to seeing that proper military precautions are taken. It is for the Residents to determine whether "armed insurrection" necessitating the use of troops exists in his province, and whether the emergency is such that it is necessary to act without delay or after reference to the Government. In the latter case, the Government will be consulted as to the number of troops to be sent, and the manner in which they should be employed.

General Disturbance. This will be taken to mean a state of riot or lawlessness by a considerable proportion of the community in districts under settled administrative control as to necessitate the employment of troops for its suppression. The regulations set forth above for the suppression of armed insurrection are equally applicable to cases of disturbance.

5. Punitive Patrols. A "punitive patrol" may be

(a) A patrol sent into a settled country for the purpose of inflicting punishment.

(b) A patrol sent into an unsettled country with the definite object of inflicting punishment and when there is no intention of following such action by bringing the district under immediate administrative control.

Before sending a punitive patrol into a settled country, the sanction of the High Commissioner will, when practicable, and provided the case is not one of great urgency, be obtained. In the case of punitive patrols into an unsettled country, the prior authority of the High Commissioner will invariably be obtained. It is for the Resident to determine, (subject to the approval of the High Commissioner) in the case of a punitive patrol, the extent to which punitive action shall be taken.

6. Patrols. A "patrol" will be taken in operations where no settled administrative control is maintained, but where opposition may be met with.

"Patrols" will always be accompanied by a Political Officer, and the prior sanction of the High Commissioner must be obtained. The proximate cause of the permission for a patrol being given may be the fact that the inhabiting the district has not continued raids upon its neighbours who are under Government protection, but no one village may be more immediately responsible for these raids than another, and the ignorance of the tribe of the prohibition of such raids renders their action (which is in accord with their savage traditions) far less reprehensible than similar outrages by tribes who well understand the liabilities they incur. Permission may also be accorded when no outrages have occurred, in the endeavour to peacefully open up a district hitherto closed to civilising agencies. In both cases, but more especially, of course, in the latter every possible effort will be made to avoid any friction or hostilities. The patrol will march slowly, and not alarm the people by a sudden appearance in their midst. The political officer will always send peaceable and conciliatory messages ahead, but, if hostilities should take place, he will exercise the greatest leniency, and any fine to be considered necessary will be minimal in amount. The patrol will be accompanied unless the district is a very advanced one, in which case one of his staff will administer the district. The Political Officer, on the order of the High Commissioner, will arrange with the Officer Commanding troops for occasional "patrols" through through districts thus being brought under administrative control;

III. PROCEDURE

1. (Procedure when order to be used before force is actually reported to an ultimatum should be delivered with a clear intimation that disregard beyond the time limit assigned will result in forcible measures. The ultimatum should consist of a demand for the due performance within a specified time of a specific act or acts capable of being performed within that time by the Chief or Headman to whom the ultimatum is sent. The greatest care must be taken that he and as many of his people as possible clearly understand what it is they are required to do or to refrain from doing and which has given rise to the ultimatum. It is also that the ultimatum... which it is intended to... effect... when police... effect... have been... of threatened... or... to...

to effect their object the ultimatum should consist of a demand for the surrender within a specified time of the accused and of the persons who have shielded him or who fired upon or threatened the police, and the consequences of failure to comply with the demand should be plainly stated.

If the demands of the Political Officer are refused, the troops will at his request, be despatched to the immediate locality concerned; the ultimatum will be repeated, and if still disregarded, the Officer commanding troops will be directed to take action. Time having been allowed for the non-combatants to escape, the troops would then advance, but no fire should be opened until the troops are attacked or until it is evident that an attack is imminent. Every effort should be made to avoid bloodshed.

An Officer or experienced British Non-Commissioned Officer will always be personally in command of troops when action has to be taken. If a British Non-commissioned Officer is in command, he must have definite orders in writing, especially as to the circumstances under which he is justified in opening fire. Should such written instructions be impossible, his oral orders will be most definite and precise. Under no circumstances will operations be conducted by native troops without a European, native or British, being sent to effect an arrest or carry out any object which will probably involve hostilities, unless accompanied by a European. In the event of resistance being met with, as soon as this has been broken down, the first object will be to secure the...

as passengers to the defenced people. These will be some of the primary objects with a view to what their lives will be saved and they will not be secured as prisoners.

Political Officer not to interfere with military operations. The Resident or other civil or political officer is not authorized to interfere in any way with the formation or details of the force, the military officer being responsible for the success of the operation to be undertaken, and it is for the latter, and for his alone, to judge in what manner the troops can effect the object which the civil officer has indicated, and to direct the force in the execution of the service in which he is engaged.

It is, however, the military officer should consider his force inadequate for the performance of the service required, or the service itself impracticable or likely to be a disaster on the military government, it would be competent for him to decline to accede to the requisition; but, in so doing, he must be prepared to justify his refusal to the satisfaction of the High Commissioner.

It is for the Resident, or other civil officer, to refer to the approval of the High Commissioner of the military requisition, and to communicate the same upon the Military Command for the service of the troops under his command; and he is not called upon to justify his requisition to the High Commissioner, or to the military officer to whom the requisition is referred.

such manifestations of confidence and cordiality are always to be desired; but only required in so far as they do not state distinctly or distinctly impliedly the desires to see performed, and the necessity of cooperation for the purpose, and to afford such further information as may be necessary to enable the officer in command, efficiently to perform the service he is called upon to execute.

10. Prisoners not to be retained. After military operations, no prisoners are to be retained, except for a few hours, or at most, a day, for the purpose of sending them as messengers to their people in their hiding places, or for a day or two, as temporary guides.

11. Despatches and Reports. (Other than Progress Reports) will be furnished as set forth in G.S.O. 1 paragraph 25.

Return will be furnished as set forth in G.S.O. 1, paragraph 26.

An Intelligence Officer will be detailed as laid down in paragraph 27 of G.S.O. 1. This term refers to "Expeditions".

12. Progress Reports. Officers in command of military operations, irrespective of whether they are ordered as an "expedition" or otherwise, will report as fully and frequently as circumstances demand to the High Commissioner for the submission of the High Commissioner.

The Political Officer will make a report to the Resident of the Province invariably repeating any telegraphic report direct to the High Commissioner.

13. Opponent's casualties. As reported on cables as the circumstances admit, of all the kind of the casualties on the side of the opponent in every case where the troops are actively engaged. The Officer in Command will furnish this report through the proper channel to the Commandant for the information of the High Commissioner, and the Political Officer will furnish a similar report to the Resident in charge of the Province, repeating such as above to the High Commissioner.

14. Political Officers with Troops. The Resident in charge of a Province wherein troops are engaged in military operations will, when practicable, accompany the troops. When this is impracticable, he will give instructions to the Officer in Command of his Staff to act for him. The Political Officer will accompany the troops.

Mr. Churchill.

The Earl of Elgin.

I have the honour to inform you that your attention has been called to your confidential despatch No. 28 of the 1st of April last, relating to the Kisi Expedition of 1908, and to express to you my regret that by an oversight no reply has hitherto been sent to that despatch.

2. It is evident that the operations undertaken by the expedition were very successful in attaining the object in view without loss of life among the Government forces.

for custody

I have to express to you my satisfaction at this result, and my hope that, as you anticipate, the pacification of this district and its peaceable administration henceforth are now assured.

3. It is not clear to me whether you intended the despatch under reply to be a Despatch relating to Field Operations in the sense in which that expression is used in para. 14 to 17 of the Regulations for the King's African Rifles.

I gather that this was probably your intention because you have enclosed in the despatch reports from the Officer Commanding the Expedition, in particular his letter dated the 17th of March 1908, which are plainly intended to be enclosures in a despatch of that nature. If this is the case,

I have to point out that the regulations for the submission of such despatches have been contravened more than one particular despatch itself is not headed "Despatches relating to Field Operations" in the manner prescribed

prescribed in paragraph 170 of the Regulations for the King's African Rifles. You will see from that regulation, in the absence of this heading, a despatch will be regarded as sent for information, and not as a recommendation for rewards. You have, on the other ^{hand} and, marked your despatch "Confidential", which would seem to indicate that it was not your intention that it should be published, whereas a Despatch relating to Field Operations ^{"intended"} is of course, if the operations are of sufficient importance, often ^{to be published in} published in the London Gazette.

In paragraph 171 of the Regulations it is laid down that Despatches relating to field operations should not contain reference to previous correspondence. ^{The} ^{despatch} ^{under} ^{rely/does} contain such a reference, ^{as appearing in} in paragraph 2 your despatch No. 97 of the 3rd of March, 1908, which dealt with the political aspect of the expedition.

and which I should not regard as suitable for publication in the ordinary course.

Paragraph 123 of the Regulations provides that the name of an officer or soldier whom it is desired to recommend for reward must be mentioned with commendation in the covering despatch of the Governor, as well as in the report of the Officer Commanding the Operations. In his letter of the 19th of March, Lieutenant-Colonel Mackay furnishes a long list of recommendations for individual reward, but none of these recommendations are mentioned in your covering despatch, either by way of support or dissent. You also have not expressed your opinion, which would be indispensable for any consideration of the proposal, on the recommendation made by Lieutenant-Colonel Mackay that the Africa General Service medal should be granted for the operations.

DRAFT.

4. If I am right in thinking that ^{what is the} desirs the operations to be considered with a view to the grant of a medal or of individual rewards, the best course would be that the operations should be included in any general despatch which you may write concerning such minor fighting in 1908 as is contemplated in paragraph 172 of the Regulations of the King's African Rifles. It would seem that, successful as the operations were from the political point of view, they were not either in point of arduousness, danger, or intrinsic importance, such as to demand a separate despatch relating to Field Operations. In suggesting to you that they should be included in a general despatch relating to such operations, I must not be understood to express any opinion as to the probability of a medal or of any individual rewards, either granted in connexion with them. this is a matter which must be carefully discussed with the Army Council reference

~~the~~ Office with ~~a~~ view to the relative importance and cost of these operations from a military point of view in comparison with similar operations undertaken in East Africa and other Colonies and Protectorates.
