VALUE OF ILLUSTRATIONS

The use of illustrations among men of consequence has become a recognized feature. Whether to a producer or a seller, a carefully illustrated advertisement or well printed statement with a line or process block engraved thereon is a valuable asset. The size had out can be actually valued in figures as reliably as a well thought stock in trade. It offers a security as sound as unencumbered land.

Illustrated Advertisement or well printed statement with a line or process block engraved thereon is a valuable asset. The size had out can be actually valued in figures as reliably as a well thought stock in trade. It offers a security as sound as unencumbered land. The modern process of Photolithography or etchings on copper and zinc has been improved and changed, that illustration blocks for name headings, Post Cards, Invitation Cards and, for purposes can not be purchased to make engravings of this class of work. It costs at cut off prices where you have a complete plant, producing a picture blocks.

A Photographer's Luck.

(From a London Correspondent.)

Some months before the Italian-Turkey War, a major of various kinds of cameras was reported by me as being on his way to pass through Tripoli, where he was deeply impressed by the grandeur of the old fortifications, and as an amateur photographer he could not resist taking a large number of photographs. On his arrival in London he discovered that the camera he had used in the photographs in the hands of a highly respected photographer in the name of Major and might be supplied by him with a new camera.

At the time, however, the great photographer was engaged in painting with his brush for the day, and was very busy indeed. They were kept by the Agency in London, and the Major was very anxious to get his camera. The war which eventually broke out between the two countries made it impossible for the photographer simply to demand a return of the camera. He was obliged to write to Mr. H. who was naturally very sympathetic to him, and was very anxious to get his camera.
