February 15th

THE closing, on Saturday, February 15, of the subscription lists opened by the Cambridge University Press for the sale of the new edition of the Encyclopacial Britannics, in British East Africa and Uganda, will mark the end of a remarkable ofer, which has already been withdrawn in the United Kingdom and in other has already been withdrawn in the United Kingdom and in 9ther quarters of the Empire as well as in the United States. The offer is a notable one because it represents the less efforts of one of our great Universities to place within the reach of the widest possible public, wherever the English-language is read, an educationar work of the wholest utility, the latest edition of a look which, during a century and a half, has established itself as the greatest encyclopactia in the world.

A costly book for a large public.

That such a publication as the new Encyclopaedia Britannica should prove costly to prepare is inevitable, since the task to be accomplished was an immense one, namely to afford, in some $0.00 separate articles adapted alike for reading and for reference. adequate and recent information upon every subject of inquiry.

At the same time, a book which performs this great service is useful to all classes of readers. Did it aim at achieving less—had useful to all classes of readers. Did it aim at achieving less—had it consequently proved less costly to prepare—it would not appeal as a possession of practical value to so large a public.

It is evident, then, that, from an educational point of view, half the merit of publishing such a work must consist in so con-proved successful. It is, indeed, such a record as will not us be matched in the annals of publishing.

With their special object in view, the plan which a publishers proposed to themselves was of a double nature, a fixing of a minimum price, and the acceptance of this minimum.

The question of price.

In measuring, by comparison with other books, the cheap of the new Encyclopaedia Britannica at its minimum subscrip price, it is possible to take only the purely physical point of a —to judge by the actual number of words given at the price. I it need scarcely be said, is not an adequate measure to adopt respect of literature. But were it it possible to take into accessls the relative value of the contents—the distinction of authors, the interest and enduring usefulness of what they we the comparison would be even more overwhelmingly in favor the new Encyclopaedia Britannica

Equal to 440 books costing 7 times as much.

It has been said, for example, that the new edition, with 14 has been said, for example, that the new entition, will 44 million words, would equal in contents 41 ordinary or books, each containing 400 pages, with 250, words to the page so large a proportion as half this number were bought at the low average price of 5; each, and, of the remainder, 120 ced and 100 cost 126, the total cost of such a collection of is would amount to £162, 10/-seven times the present price of would amount to $162, 10,—seven times ine present price at new Encyclopacia Britannica. While the contents in either would be equal in amount, however, no such collection of separate books—nor of double that number—would approach usefulness to the complete library afforded by the new large

Again, if the ordinary biography or book of travel and 21/- contains between 200,000 and 300,000 words, the purchase the new Encyclopaedia Britannica at its present price. seven times as much (1.800,000 words) for every 21/- he spen and acquires a possession of enduring interest and constant fulness, whereas other books are often good only for one re-

In respect of the great value received for the price, it In respect of the great value received for the price, ind the new edition of the Encyclopaetia Britannica is compa-only to other editions of the same work—and, at its subscri-price, the new edition exists 14s 2d, a volume less than the edition, which was published at 30 a volume. Even here, b ever, the comparison does not do full justice to the present edit for though its volumes cost 14s. 2d. less than did those of the edition, each contains fully 300,000 words more, while the cost of preparation has been more than double, and the result, believed, will be found fully twice as useful.

Only Rs. 15 a month.

Having established a minimum price, it remained for publishers to facilitate purchase by accepting small most payments. These small payments, it must be remembered, by payments. These small payments, it must be remembered, ever, are not a charge incurred over an indefinite period for use of the book. They are contributions towards its purbande during a limited period—and the entire 29 volumes rebookcase, if required) are delivered complete for a first payment.
