A WARTIME SMASH.

Railway Disaster Which Was Kept Secret.

Recent train disasters in Britain through a comparison with previous railway crashes. The Daily Mail pointed out that the Dartington wreck was the most serious since that at Great Green, Dumfriesshire, in 1914, when the dead numbered 227. It was serious, each train was not necessarily overtaken in a cutting. The subsequent account of the Great Green crash has been published for the benefit of those not acquainted with the details.

At Great Green, a passenger train of 200, carrying 200 officers and a host of the Royal Scots, collided head-on with a local passenger train from Carlisle, which had been switched from the down to the up line to make way for a Euston to Glasgow express behind it. It was certainly what the Board of Trade inquiry, it had been reported by the Board of Trade on June 10, 1914, that the train was carrying 200 officers and a host of the Royal Scots, and that the train was carrying 200 officers and a host of the Royal Scots.

No body named was many of the dead that it was long before their bodies could be identified. The report said that several of the Royal Scots were to have been killed, and that later at the Dartington. Several passengers in the express, including a number of officers returning to their homes on leave from the front, were killed or injured. The local train, occupied by the coach full with British forces on the 200 soldiers in the train. The name of the accident was not long in doing. At the Queen's Hill had one signature was not long in doing. At the Queen's Hill had one signature was not long in doing. At the Queen's Hill had one signature was not long in doing.

In Mine Romance.

A POOR MAN'S BID FOR FORTUNE.

A well-known firm of London accountants is investigating a poor man's claim that he may be the sole surviving relative of a wealthy American mining pioneer. The case is said to concern the estate of one of the founders of the famous Broken Hill Proprietary Company.

The full story of the foundation of that firm has been told in a volume entitled 'From Silver to Steel', written by Mr. Roy Douglas. In 1888 the mining was in full progress at the Broken Hill, and a boundary rider named Charles, being exceptionally popular with the claims to 40 acres on Broken Hill. He believed that he had secured a valuable patch of black sands.

Mr. Douglas MacCallum, his name had threatened to break the back of any man who put forward a claim, and it was with great expectation that they called on him to tell him that he was giving up his job to work the claim. MacCallum persuaded him to let the claim pass to the enterprise and a stipulation of seven years was formed, each man putting up £70. A mining surveyor named William James, calling on MacCallum one evening to pay for a balance in his 'bought land' and the big man trying to drive a bargain for another land claim, with a 'cash claim' named Col. MacCallum wanted £200, and Col. would offer only £100. 'If you want,' said the surveyor, 'I'll give you £100. 'I'll play you another,' said the manager. 'If I see you will pay me £200. If I see you will pay a fortnight share for £200. MacCallum won the first game. For the second and the rubber. 'It was a game of cards for the record table in history,' wrote Mr. Douglas.

HYPOTHICATION OF CROPS. Chamber and Law Society to Confer. A NEUTRAL QUESTION.

Nairobi Chamber of Commerce announced on Thursday the opening of a public inquiry into the question of allowing the holders to provide for the hypothecation of crops. Mr. J. A. Tyson said that the public inquiry and other conferences which he has in the question of preparing legislation to provide for a greater security for crop loans was discussed. It was an old and very involved question but the Kenya Farmers' Association had been pressing for something to be done. At the same conference it was agreed that the Institute of Agriculture should take up the matter with the Attorney General and Mr. Tyson would like to have an inquiry addressed to the Department of Agriculture in which the matter would be being taken in the matter. Mr. Tyson said he did not think Mr. Tyson's proposal was a good one. He thought it was a good one. He thought it was a good one. He thought it was a good one.

Acid in the Battery.

WHAT EVAPORATION MEANS.

A detail on which the average motorist or owner is very likely to make an error is that of maintaining the dilute acid, particularly formed the electrolyte in the battery not only at the correct level but also at the correct strength.

The rubber cover above generally grows to "fit" up the battery case and again with distilled water will inevitably show the battery if followed too liberally. Proof of this is evident in the fact that it is not unusual for batteries that have been sent to a service station or repair shop to contain acid which, when tested by a hydrometer, is found to be only a half, or even a third, of the proper strength having been weakened by too frequent additions of distilled water, and, consequently, the battery has seriously deteriorated in voltage and amperage capacity.

In the process of charging there is a slight loss of the water component of the dilute acid by evaporation, and, as a consequence, the electrolyte becomes slightly stronger in acid than at normal strength.

In the course of time, the top edge of the lead board will be exposed to the air of the room, and it is important to avoid this. If this level is maintained by adding only distilled water to offset the loss, the strength of the acid will remain the same.

It is important to note, when battery is first put into use, the top edge of the lead board at the top edge of the plates—a corner of an inch will suffice, and the battery will soon be balanced. Whenever the acid level is lowered, the acid level will be weakened. It may happen that a particular battery will lose acid by the piling of the one on rough roads. This is a case where it is important to restore the loss by adding dilute acid of the standard strength and not by adding water. This acid can be got in most garages and battery service places.

The general tendency is for the acid in the battery to become weaker than when originally put in, so there is some small quantity less than that of every gallon which the car makes up automatically by adding water. Every car owner should have a battery hydrometer and an acid test kit for strength every three or four weeks and should be constantly keeping the level constant.

It is important to note that the electrolyte in the battery is kept, throughout, the acid above the level of the plates. The correct level is 1/2 inch above the top of the plates. The battery should be in a perfectly charged or discharged battery will show a lower reading.

If, after fully charging, the acid does not show the normal strength, it should be brought to strength. In this case the acid will have to be topped up with the same 1:225 ratio.—E. H. B. (cont.)

The Vix Humidor.

TESTIMONIAL FROM KENYA MOTORIST.

The Nairobi, East African Standard, for the Vix Humidor, has received an unqualified and very valuable testimonial from a Kenya resident who found one of the best of its kind—a Standard Six Black (1925 model).

The correspondent, writing the course of his business travel, writes that he has been through a great deal all over the country, and he happens to be one of the motorists who has always kept a record of his mileage and petrol consumption. The Vix Humidor was fixed, he writes, after 14,000 miles had been covered, and he writes that the average is 22 m.p.g.

After fixing the humidor, he writes, the distance run did up to 22 m.p.g., while the petrol and factors were perfectly correct.

He writes further: "Another detail worth noting is the fact that most of the above readings are results from running my engine on 50 per cent petrol and 50 per cent paraffin in mixture. The petrol is 'Pyralis' and the paraffin is 'Keros' and although I have run this mixture for over 2,000 miles yet I have not noticed any signs of wearing on any other mechanism whatsoever in the engine. My car fuel economy is reduced to half and it is due to the Vix Humidor only."

The Brake.

NEED FOR MORE CAREFUL ATTENTION.

The development of the motor car is taking the form of speed, and the most common cause of the light car with the most powerful engine is the material used in the construction of the chassis. The chassis is made of light metal, and the most common cause of the light car with the most powerful engine is the material used in the construction of the chassis. The chassis is made of light metal, and the most common cause of the light car with the most powerful engine is the material used in the construction of the chassis.

The Wiper.

DOMESTIC THE CAUSE OF TROUBLE.

If you are unfortunate enough, your engine is bound to start on morning, the least and you may even see the wind-screen wiper taking. On two separate occasions recently, the wiper has been broken, and this has caused a great deal of trouble. The wiper is made of rubber, and it is important to keep it in good condition.
