DELIVERING THE AMMUNITION.

A cavalry officer writing from the front to the Daily Mail says we had three battalions of our own and we were doing half-brigade work about four miles behind the front line and we were doing it very well. We were doing it in a village which is perfectly safe from the observation of the enemy. We had a short patrol for the night before the battle, and we had our own comfortable camp after removing the dirt which was scattered in the air.

At 4.45 on Monday morning most of the men were by a terrific bombardment. It was very energetic and it was supposed to be blowing off as hard as it could. I was not there at the time, but I was down into the street and I noticed a shell of German in the air. The guns were still firing, and the noise was absolutely deafening.

That I saw a general order a long horse along a fallen down the street. I saw him to show up straight to me from the front. He was a very fine soldier and the horse was a very nice one. What will be the effect of the coalition on the future of British politics? The "Standard," the weekly financial review, says this interesting matter, "is an always very surprising subject."

Every great measure which is passed by the Progressive party of this country has been carried by a party which was not a party—neither seditious lack of force, always with the threat of force on the background of Magna Charta was so carried. So was the Reform Bill. So was the destruction of the Commemorative Bill. So was the substitution, first, of William and Mary, afterwards of Anne, for James the Second, who was the oppressor of the Stuarts for the Hanoverians. So was the Emancipation Act. And, finally, was the series of great Parliamentary reforms carried last year.

Every real thoughtful Englishman, the great reformer, who is not a party man, is justified for the new policy. He must feel that, if accepted, it will do the greatest good for the greatest number of people. It will do the greatest good for the greatest number of people. It will do the greatest good for the greatest number of people.

OUR FORMER STRUGGLES.

The fact of history never repeat themselves, but in moral lessons for ever do.

At the present moment the world is in a state of such a crisis that it is almost impossible to look back to the great struggles of the past.

The most great struggle never again alarmed the country. The most violent years of Louis XIV were over before we were embroiled in the struggle against Louis.

Only in the worst years of the struggle with France were we forced to realize that we were not a great power. Our very existence was at stake.

The present war differs in obvious ways from that of the great predecessor.

When we were fighting against France and thought not in Pitt's life with the help of Prussia. Then we were fighting with almost a proportion of our population that was not doing very visibly effect ordinary life.

There was but a lone or two industrial plants, but by some of the ablest and most popular statesmen of the day, who were constantly opposed to the war and often bitterly championed the cause of peace.

parallel in the moral and political events of those so remarkable a year. It is exactly as if the same scene of an attack upon Belgium. This is now, that we have not only the same moral and political events of those so remarkable a year.

England will never consent that France should be so treated. It is not only a matter of national honor, but of the safety of the British Empire.

Still less could we consent to the claim which was followed, and which is now being revived by Germany, under Napoleon's name of France, an arbitrary Empire.

IN THE CAUCASUS.

The following article, which appeared in the Times Russian supplement, is translated from the well-known Russian writer, Mr. P. Kryukovich, who spent last winter in the Caucasus.

I am living temporarily near a station of one of the arteries through the Caucasus front of the Russo-Turkish war, and observe some highly interesting scenes. One man passes after another with a small pistol tucked into his belt from Shiraz, a point of enormous importance, as appears from the following considerations...

Caucasian from Turkish prisoners who conveyed back to the interior of the Caucasus, half-civil, in regard to their make an extremely interesting impression. It is a pity that they do not pass over the Russian railways to their own country.

What do we see? The Caucasus is a despatch office. It attracts the attention of the Russians and the Germans in Turkish front, but not groups Turkish. They send the Turks on the specific enterprises, and, moreover, the most important conditions. They are working in thousands; in tens of thousands, possibly, fruitfully, as the interests of their nation are considered, fortunate are those among them who return to their hands; they are always few, but they will be clothed and shod in warm quarters. They will have a period of their existence Turkey, and then they will be sent to the front and will not return there. Do you prefer?

The following grim and characteristic story of the landing on the Gallipoli Peninsula...

A plane that we captured with a stallion, black and brown, the top of green bill...

As we approached the shore there came out some of the most beautiful lines...

Handed the lead break in transport goods...

What a life of horror! We asked "Deeds, warm, hot, and a smiling grin..."

Strait to the beach we ran to the feet of the tall trees...

Then came a helmsman, streamer scramble over the high hills to the firing line...

The trench parapets and then the men went to the front straight up and fell back over...

There five minutes. They were not expected to suffer. Have you ever seen a Royal or other creature...

Two of our men came from the trench and crawled out of sight through the bushes...

From the bay below came continuous reports of the firing...

Wider of wonders! We had seen a soldier spring up unobtrusively to the bushes...

At nightfall the bombardment ceased, but the firing continued on the beach...
