Germs from German East, by Thos. H. Lewis

We are in receipt, from Darex-Salaam of a little book of poems entitled "Germs from German East by Thos. H.
Lewis, published in Dar-ex-Salaam is rayto with type, as the authors saysthey burned by the German when they hume they have considered to the
The poems are exceedingly clever, and have a most nlessing cadence. The poems are exceedingly clever, and have a most pleasing cadence, the rythms being that of a mester hand; to give an illustration of the quality of the matter contained between the two covers we select the ollowing at random.

My Lady, in a fretful mood; With airs and graces is imburd; And parse me with haughty stare, As one would say: "Edo not care." I plead with her—yet the in vain—. She treats me with a cold disdain. But as I know my addy wite. For tretful looks! give her—an iles

My Lady, in a playful mood, Doth often on my work intrude To bring sad havee in my den Or steal my favoured pipe—or pea She dharranges all my books Then peers at me from triendly nooks; nooks; And when there's not a soul to see,

My Lady sits upon my knee. My Lady, in a loving meed, Doth all the gifts of God include; Yet, the he wants to marry me, My wife, I find, will not agree But, with her arms around methrown

My Lady's soft lips on my own; Lask no sweeter words to hear. Than these: me loves oo, daddy

The reading of this little book of Interesting of this little book of poems gave us one haif hour of unalloyed pleasure, and we do not hesitate to tell the author to go on the touch is there; and it only requires continued application and perseverance to bring the latent perseverance to bring the lare abilities, which the author us doubtedly possess to the sur acc.

We entirely disagree with M Lewis when he agas in his forewor.

"Luckily for my readen, perhaps and at the moment unable to recomore or my shorter poems that a included in this little collection."

We think that it is a distinct be reaches were. Include, and printed in most adverse circ tances is well done and the gre credit is due to the printer as concerned in the publication.
