FALKLANDS BATTLE
 On the morning of December 9, 1914, the British battleship "Hood" was sunk by the German battle-cruiser "Blücher" in the Falkland Islands. The "Hood" was the largest battleship in the world at the time, and her sinking was a great disaster to the British fleet. The "Blücher" was also a powerful ship, and the battle was a close and hard-fought one. The "Hood" was sunk by a single salvo of three 11-inch shells from the "Blücher's" main battery. The "Blücher" was also damaged, but managed to escape. The sinking of the "Hood" was a major blow to the British fleet, and it was a great triumph for the German fleet.

SOUTH AFRICAN PROTESTANTS.

A question of great interest and considerable importance has been concerning the minds of respectable Ministers in the Union of South Africa during the past month. The subject of Protestantism in South Africa, independent of the Union, is a subject that has been a high Commissioner in connection, and was presented in accordance with the usual official procedure in a manner that is bound to receive serious attention from time to time and, with the general trend of thought that occurs wherever Dismissals have been in a Union of South Africa, the subject has become a matter of public discussion in a number of places in South Africa.

The South African Federation of Free British Churches, which was not intended to include the whole of the South African Union, was formed in 1902, and its members are now 100,000. It is the only body of its kind in the Union, and its members are now 100,000. It is the only body of its kind in the Union, and its members are now 100,000.
