My Lord,

I had a long conversation yesterday with Mr. MacMillan, an American gentleman of wealth who is well known to the Foreign Office in connection with explorations in Abyssinia and on the Blue Nile, and who owns a large stock property at Juja about 18 miles from Nairobi on which he resides, as well as a house and property in Nairobi.

2. Few people are better acquainted with the conditions of the Uplands than Mr. MacMillan and he has proved himself a good friend to the settlers, many of whom he has helped in various ways, and others he has taken on in his own employment when no longer able to carry on their farms.

3. He told me little I did not know before, on the other hand he fully confirmed some views I have recently expressed.

4. Touching on the alleged grievances of the up-country settlers he expressed the decided opinion that they had no legitimate grievance of which he was aware. The constant cause of agitation agitation was the fact that a number of people had rushed into the country with no experience and little money with the expectation of making fortunes. Not only had these expectations not been realised but they now found that they had spent most of their money and that the best of them were hardly able to make a living, while those who had made no serious effort, of whom there were many, were going under.

5. Though there was doubtless a shortage of labour at the time preceding the Labour Meeting at Nairobi, this was used as a means for an agitation which, otherwise, would have found some other pretext for declaring itself, the bed rock of the situation being the want of means of obtaining a livelihood. He himself had been scarce of labour just at that time when the Kikuyu are in the habit of remaining in their shambas; since then he has had more labourers than he requires and has had to turn applicants away.

6. The country he thought was no place for the small man with neither capital nor experience, and finding that farming on the Uplands had failed to produce the expected result, and that it was difficult to earn a living out of mealies, potatoes, and beans, in the present conditions of the uplands, the settlers turned round and attacked the Government, who had invited them here. We made a great mistake, he thought, in opening up the country to small men, and inviting them to come from South Africa. Not only should we not have invited them but, he considered, we should not have allowed them to enter. The question as to what we are now to do with them was a serious one, and he thought we should have to repatriate a number. He looked upon the bacon factory as the best hope for the struggling settler.

7. As to the prospects on the Coast he spoke hopefully, and the same of the prospects of ranching, provided, and here is the danger, that the country is not swept by the epidemic of rinderpest now prevalent in Jubaland.

8. This conversation was interesting because I feel sure that had Mr MacMillan thought that the settlers had a legitimate grievance we were able to remove he would not have hesitated to tell me.

I have the honour to be,

With the highest respect,

My Lord,

view that it would be necessary to refer to

2. There can be no doubt that the presence of a number of white settlers who are either unwilling or unable to earn a livelihood by their industry, is a source of danger to the order & good government of the Prot., and, if,
as I understand, to
you were in Mr.
Merrill's view that there are a number of persons in this condition, I should be glad if you would furnish me with an estimate of your ^{estimation} losses as to the desirability of

of a policy of rehabilitating them at the together with an estimate of the probable expenditure
involved.

3. The Govt. would of course take over the farms of such settlers allowing them compensation (where the holdings were not already forfeited), in cases where the value exceeded the cost of rehabilitation
