Water farming may be the solution for desert areas

By Ritchie Calder

WATER-FARMING could help to provide food in areas where there is a shortage of water. That may sound contradictory, since "water-farming" means replacing soil by water as a means of nourishing plants, and in deserts where it is so lacking. Often, as is shown by the natural oases of the Sahara, irrigation schemes, if it is good to make it irrigated, will not flourish when only irrigation water is used.

Water-farming can be done on a large scale but it is not done in the desert. It is done in the irrigated areas of the world. It is done in the irrigated areas of the world. It is done in the irrigated areas of the world.

Shallow troughs

Water-farming helps to conserve water by supplying water of shallow troughs. It is done in the irrigated areas of the world.

CAN SPORTS EVENTS ENSURE WORLD GOODWILL?

East Africa holds first 'Derby' dinner

By The Staff Reporter
 One of the most important aspects of sports journalism is the opportunity it provides for world goodwilling. The international character of the sport, the fact that events are held in many different parts of the world, the fact that the sport is followed by people of all races and creeds, all these factors make it an ideal medium for the promotion of world goodwilling. It is for these reasons that the sportsman is often called upon to act as an ambassador of goodwill. The sportsman who is called upon to act as an ambassador of goodwill must be a person of high character, one who is respected by all, and one who is able to bridge the gap between the different races and creeds of the world. The sportsman who is called upon to act as an ambassador of goodwill must also be a person of high character, one who is respected by all, and one who is able to bridge the gap between the different races and creeds of the world.

Prerequisites

Plans to solve the shortage of local grown tea seed

AFRICAN tea producing companies, says William's Tea, Thika, Muramba, have an advantage over producers elsewhere by retention of better producing areas, cheaper labour, absence of pests and the comparatively healthy production of quality labour.

Local plants with three or four years of growth are available for the year 1958.

REASONS FOR PROGRESSIVE IDEAS

It is not surprising that the progressive ideas which have been put forward in the past few years have been met with a certain amount of opposition. This is because the progressive ideas are new and different from the old ideas which have been in vogue for many years. The progressive ideas are based on the principle of co-operation and mutual aid, and they are based on the principle of democracy and self-government. The progressive ideas are based on the principle of justice and equality, and they are based on the principle of peace and harmony.
