THE "SLEEPY NAIROBI"

principles of long-range Colonial policy which govern and shape destiny are the issues of fundamental importance. These are the issues which must be clear and definite. Foundational administrative machinery must be set up on a firm and naturally concerned basis. It is not a matter of expediency that should not be mistaken for the deeper principles of the future.

The Association of East African Chambers of Commerce deal in its own session last week with the subject of the non-Parliamentary Paper with which deeper principles are concerned and to which, in any event, there is no likelihood of much, if any, serious discussion. But, interesting beyond the fact of the inclusion of commercial business houses avoided consideration than last year's annual conference, are the fact that all the issues are the same of which the British public, and all constitutional issues raised. The meeting agreed to a body with legislative powers, for instance, with the right to make laws, and that body or its composition or the method of its selection, or any of the essential details which is important to the people.

Because the meeting confined its attention to the procedural and technical details which is important to the people, it is not surprising to say that there must be a central legislative body, and that the responsibility of that body only begins to be applied to the people. The opinion expressed, the Association Chamber did not accept the responsibility.

"Sleepy Nairobi"

TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 1946. The President's contribution to our column yesterday a letter with the caption we have had to this article. We missed his heading undoubtedly. It seemed to me well justified, and in fact, in my opinion, the citizens of Nairobi, if they are to be their credit, should be interested in the expenditure of the effort made to reply to it. Capital used to take some pride in its mental and physical vitality. It is a business and professional men, and their capacity for work and play, and their progressive urge are the things which are the vitality of the city. So to people claimed half a generation or so ago, and that was the Nairobi of today is not to earn and deserve some such contemptuous name as "Sleepy on-the-Sidewalk" as people had better pull up their socks and visit our city and see what time the Post Office closes (though we have said before that it is much more than any other town or what time the town's services begin, or the thousand and one things which are the vitality of the city).

The Secretary of State, in the Nairobi letter, has indicated that the Central Legislative Assembly should be added to the suggested list of institutions. # HOW EAST AFRICAN ENGINEERS HELPED TO RECONSTRUCT BURMA'S RAILWAYS

On July 1943 the 31 (E.A.) Engineer Battalion R.A.F.C. was detailed to assist in the reconstruction of the bridges on the railway line from Rangoon to Mandalay. These bridges had been continually bombed by the J.A.F. during the Burma campaign in order to prevent the use of the railway by the Japanese.

The Battalion was allotted the northern section of the line between Paletia 13 miles south of Mandalay and Pyin Oaung, 245 miles north of Rangoon. The length of this section is 260 miles and contained nine railway bridges to be repaired or reconstructed. The line had to be reconstructed in the shortest time in order that Pyin Oaung might be used as rail head for projected operations to the north. Fortunately the end of the war came before these operations were launched.

The work done by the Battalion was not wasted as shortly afterwards reconstruction started at the Rangoon end of the line with a view to linking up with the Mandalay end, thus enabling personnel, food, and other stores for military and civil purposes to be transported throughout Central Burma by rail. This is particularly valuable from a strategic point of view as the amount of civilian transport available is extremely small and great difficulty was experienced in moving surplus food from one area to other areas when there was a shortage.

The work carried out by the Battalion was the largest undertaking of a much more technical nature than any tackled before. Railway bridging is a new departure in the work carried out by the East African Engineers.

It was in fact the Battalion's first worthwhile job since entering Burma and one really felt that something constructive was at last being done. At this time the Battalion was short of technical staff and a number of technicians from R.E. and I.E. units were attached to assist in the work.

Two Main Tasks. The two main tasks carried out were the reconstruction of the bridges at Sinthe and Pyin Oaung. There were among the three most difficult tasks carried out on the Rangoon-Mandalay line in date.

Sinthe Changai is 10 miles north of Pyin Oaung and was crossed by a railway bridge consisting of four 100-foot spans of the standard type of railway girder used in Burma before the war supported on steel piers. The R.A.F.C. had destroyed this bridge very severely and had been unable to reconstruct it.

The first task was to clear the site of the bridge by removing all the debris and timber which had been blown down into the river. This was made possible by the construction of a timber trestle bridge surrounding the place to be excavated. Constant pumping was required to remove the water which kept collecting in under the debris.

The two steel girder spans near the bridge were found to be irreparable and so they were jacked up from the river bed and supported on temporary timber cribs.

Sleepless Nights. The officers-in-charge of the job spent many sleepless nights and on more than one occasion dreamt of their heads colliding. The jacking was troublesome and often failed on their attempts. Repair consisted of cutting out damaged parts of the wooden spans with oxy-acetylene cutting apparatus and replacing them with jacked out of those spans which were unfit for use. The new parts were either bolted or welded into position. One of the difficulties encountered in this repair work was the removal of the cranes holding the various parts together.

Several methods were used including shooting at the pivot heads with a heavy antitank rifle. This was done by the B.C.M.C. at night blank range behind cover (see page 10 of this issue) (E.A.F. Press please note).

This was successful but extremely difficult. The majority of bolts fired made a neat hole in the rivet dislodging it at the same time. The best method was by using a heavy pneumatic concrete breaker with its steel tapers to a chisel point and tempered.

Imagine then two or three Africans poised at all angles in mid-air as if supported by hooks under a machine similar in make, size and weight to a pneumatic road drill chipping the head of a rivet, their bodies shaking Below—Steel bridge ready for use. The two new spans measure 100 feet long and weigh 70 tons each. They are supported by eight steel trusses, one reinforced concrete shaft. The Orderly (B.C.M.C.) Sergeant of the Battalion (middle) is a graduate of one span which normally goes through during jacking. The Engineer was a member of the Battalion. The man on the right is the man who was on the bridge when the Japanese captured it for the old Burma Railway.

Top Right—Sapper Edith, B.C.M.C., is a member of the 31 (E.A.) Engineer Battalion. She is the only woman in the Battalion. She is a member of the B.C.M.C. at work.

Aircraft Versus Locusts

Further Developments in Large Scale Locust Destruction From The Air

(By R. L. GUNN, D.S.C.)

ATTEMPTS have been made in the past to stop plagues from aircraft using locusts. Considerable success was attained in South Africa, by this method, but the poison used—arsenic—caused trouble. About three years ago an Australian locust plague in the East Indies. Flights of the R.A.F. was formed in 1934, in collaboration with the Home Office, prepared to meet an invasion by the desert locust from the East. In the spring of 1941 the flight moved down to Kenya and carried out testing operations on locusts. Dr. A.S. Stephens, of the Colonial Veterinary Research Institute, Nairobi, carried out tests on the locusts' farm near Nairobi. The locusts' farm near Nairobi is the only one of its kind in the world. It is a large area of land, and the locusts are kept in a large enclosure. The locusts are kept in a large enclosure, and the locusts are kept in a large enclosure.

TANGANYIKA INCOME TAX
 Visiting Expert's Comment

(STANDARD COMMENTARY)
 Sir Wilfrid Woods, who will be known to the public as the author of the Tanganyika Standard comment on the Income Tax Bill, has written an interesting article on the subject in the Standard. He is of the opinion that the Bill is a good one, and that it will be a great help to the Government in raising the revenue. He also points out that the Bill is a very important one, and that it will be a great help to the Government in raising the revenue.

Added to comment on the proposed question of the continuation of Income Tax—a war measure which the Revenue Committee recommended should be retained. Sir Wilfrid has pointed out that the main public concern about the continuation of Income Tax was not merely that one had to dip into one's pocket, but that the Government was not prepared to pay for the war. He has pointed out that the Government is not prepared to pay for the war, and that the only way to raise the revenue is by increasing the tax.

He has also pointed out that the Government is not prepared to pay for the war, and that the only way to raise the revenue is by increasing the tax. He has also pointed out that the Government is not prepared to pay for the war, and that the only way to raise the revenue is by increasing the tax.

East Africa A Rich Field For Archaeologists

BIG INTEREST IN NEXT YEAR'S PRE-HISTORY CONGRESS

THAT East Africa may become one of the great fields for the archaeological workers in the next year is the opinion of the British Association of Archaeologists. The Association, which is holding its annual meeting in London, has decided to send a large party to East Africa next year. The party will be led by the British Museum, and will include some of the best archaeologists in the world. The party will be interested in the pre-historic remains of East Africa, and will be particularly interested in the remains of the Stone Age.

Drought Killing Clove Trees

(STANDARD COMMENTARY)

The continued drought in Zanzibar has caused the destruction of many clove trees. The clove trees are a very important crop in Zanzibar, and their destruction will be a great loss to the Government. The Government is now trying to do something to help the clove growers, but it is not clear what the results will be.

THE KIPANDE

MONDAY, APRIL 8, 1946

For a number of weeks we have had a steady stream of columns of correspondents. In the past, the Native Affairs Commission has been the main focus of attention, and in particular its outward and apparently too visible activities. It is, however, our duty to give every encouragement to the Commission because we were given to understand that it was intended to establish an all-Kenya African opinion to find expression in a better climate of public interest to every African. The average European is not interested in the form identification passes, provided it is adequate for all ordinary social and political purposes, and that point, together with the obvious one that in every case the State must be proper means of identification, is practically all that the average European will make, or will make, to the fact, for he accepts the fact of personal identification as a necessary part of life in any country and has little to say about it. The fact that the State has a paper identity is a complex system of today it is important that it should be a simple one. It is, therefore, a satisfactory evidence, if he says of him his name appears on an instrument of national and international documents and registers for the State's bill to the voters roll, his photograph as first essentials of travel.

How much is it worth?

The Planned Protection offered by the "Old Mutual" is like an umbrella. You can't raise its full value until you want it... and find that you haven't got it.

There is this difference. If you haven't an umbrella, it is usually only you who suffer. The "Old Mutual" enables you to acquire Planned Protection, according to your income, status, now and in the years before you. May we tell you more about it?
