

U.S. ENDS FIRST PHASE OF PULL-OUT

The final contingent of the 25,000 American troops President Nixon pledged to withdraw from South Vietnam by the end of the month left Saigon yesterday.

A U.S. military spokesman disclosed that allied planes bombed targets in the demilitarized zone on Wednesday, provoking 27 secondary explosions. Before the two-pronged attack, a bomber plane flying over the southern sector of the zone was hit by a heavy machine gun burst. The observer was wounded, but the plane reached base safely.

Numerous sporadic clashes broke throughout the country on Wednesday, but no major confrontations.

Victims and North Vietnamese guerrillas launched 24 harassment bombings during the night, eight of which were described by the spokesman as "important".

Two people were killed and 14 wounded when two mortar shells landed on the Cai Lay District near My Tho.

A Government spokesman said South Vietnamese forces suffered "heavy" losses during a clash with "enemy" troops in the Delta. Forty Vietcong were reported on the battlefield after the clash.

The equivalent of a withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Vietnam was acknowledged yesterday.

Asked if this resulted from a secret or tacit agreement with Hanoi, a State Department spokesman, Mr. Robert McCloskey, replied: "No comment."

North Vietnamese infiltration was "considerably down", he said, and the number of men being infiltrated was less than the number of North Vietnamese being killed in fighting.

The result was a "slow and gradual" reduction in North Vietnamese troops in the South, which was equivalent to a progressive withdrawal of Hanoi's forces.

Asked whether Washington was waiting for confirmation at the Paris talks, regardless of developments on the battlefield, before deciding on more American withdrawal, Mr. McCloskey refused comment.

But he said the United States wanted to end the conflict by negotiation which would lead to the withdrawal of all troops.

Mr. Dean Rusk, a former secretary of State, said publicly that North Vietnamese infiltration had fallen to practically nothing. Mr. McCloskey refused to go this far, though he said infiltration was "considerably down" and "we consider this fact significant."

Asked on what figures Mr. Rusk based his assertion, the spokesman replied only that the ex-Secretary had access to State Department papers since he continued to serve the Department as an adviser.

It appeared "that North Vietnamese are not replacing all of their casualties with the result that there is a net reduction in enemy field forces."

Remaining enemy forces were about 70 per cent North Vietnamese and 30 per cent Vietcong, he said. In Saigon, two young Vietcong prisoners released for good conduct were given coats of blue and red stripes, exempting them from further military service.

The two youths, aged 16 and 19, were released after a short captivity, attended by Saigon's Prefect, Col. Do Kien Nheu, at the Town Hall.

A total of 44 prisoners-of-war were released throughout the country yesterday as part of the Government's "reconciliation policy." — Agencies

What it's like to live in one of Nairobi's shanty towns

They call it Kaburini — the name near the cemetery. But anyone entering the shanty town of Quarry Road, not far from the centre of Nairobi, would think he had entered the city itself — except that the squatters are alive.

Kaburini, with its 5,000 people jammed into just an acre of ground and flimsy houses, is a typical of the shanty settlements which have sprung up all over Nairobi.

But it does have the distinction of being more well-known than the others, by virtue of two disastrous fires, one in 1954 and which destroyed most of the village and left 150 residents without a home.

At that moment, the public conscience was pricked as pitiful scenes of women and children begging for pennies and pennies appeared in the streets. In such occasions things were done, and some things done today there are still 5,000 people who were left after the last fire in more or less to fend for themselves.

Recently, when a television commentator was showing handierats of the squatters in that this showed "not everything that comes out of Mathari Valley is bad." Such is the reputation of the homeless people who huddle together in the numerous shanty towns which are growing in size around Nairobi. But the life of these poor people, as in the community as a whole, contains a cross-section of good and evil.

However, they do represent a social problem, though not as big so far as the shanty towns of cities such as Caracas and Manila, where this mode of life has grown until it dominates the scene.

In a series of articles, Michael Boydell describes the way of life of these people, unknown to most outsiders, and what is being done to help them. The first one today simply describes what he found on an afternoon's visit to one of Nairobi's more notorious shanty towns, without making any comment or judgment on the predicament of the occupants.

The spirit of Kaburini

I visited the site this week to get the answer to the question: what kind of people are these who live in the same conditions of squalor and poverty as Kaburini, yet who are not abandoned by the police in the face of their lawlessness?

I found a society as used to being shunned and ignored by the white world that they had built a complex code of rules of their own, suited to an existence on their own and no property rights.

The actual living conditions are appalling. When I was there the rain was falling, but I did not need permission to imagine what it is like during the rains, when the mud houses "dissolve" over the heads of the occupants who are shivering and miserable on the ground.

The "social hall" built of mud and mud bricks and with a roof of mud and mud bricks was the only place where the people could meet together, but it was impossible to walk between the mud walls.

Most of the beds slept at were made of mud and mud bricks.

The lucky ones had a bed and a blanket to keep them warm at night. Others slept on paper.

A public attempt to secure a public health service from the Council because the squatters had been erected between houses, though in many cases the houses were built on the ruins of a piece of paper.

The squalor was plain to see, and expected. But what was surprising was the way in which most of the people had retained their respect, basic hygiene and optimism.

Latrines had been dug and was obtained from a standpipe in the nearby flats at Kaburini. In places garbage had been lying around (there is no municipal service from the Council because the squatters had been erected between houses, though in many cases the houses were built on the ruins of a piece of paper).

But the most remarkable children and healthy.

One woman, I was told, disappeared. She was eventually found, her way to Kaburini.

had died of pneumonia after a particularly wet spell, and another had died of tuberculosis. But it is a tribute to the basic cleanliness and orderliness of the community that there has so far been no serious epidemic in Kaburini.

The social life is a lesson in the resilience of human nature and spirit. Living a life unrelated to the majority of the community, the people have invented a system of rules and traditions of their own.

A major economic activity of Kaburini is the brewing of illegal pombe. The inhabitants buy the ingredients (millet and yeast) and sell the finished brew to customers from outside at a price of 1/- a large kimo can, and 50 cents for a small one. (There is clearly no danger of an Al Capone appearing in Kaburini).

This, of course, invites the attention of the police, who make daily raids on the village and frequently haul offenders off to court. This means raising a fine out of meagre resources.

Customers and purveyors alike have perfected a system for hiding their pombe when the word of a police raid gets around. The makers themselves drink the pombe. I was told, mainly to keep warm at night.

Except for this one activity, the people of Kaburini are law-abiding. Apart from their pombe raids, the police often visit it for social calls and I found one laughing and talking to a jovial woman who was preparing food. "The people here are not bad," he told me.

It was this sentiment that the people themselves were anxious to get across to me, and the outside world, which they regarded as uniformly, and unfairly, hostile.

"All we want is somewhere to go, to have land and a permanent roof over our heads," said the chairman of Kaburini village, Mr. James Mutha Gichuhi. "We do not care when the Government sends us — we will work and show that everyone was wrong about Kaburini. We want to be good citizens."

With their own community, the people of Kaburini have to be good citizens. Because there is no security, any crime would quickly lead to chaos and a crisis of ownership.

Nevertheless, arguments do arise, and these are often settled by the most remarkable phenomenon in the village: the internal police force which the villagers describe as "youth wings".

It is the job of the youth wings (there are 15 of them) to keep law and order in the community and settle disputes. But if the case is serious enough they report it to the local chief or the police.

It is the community spirit which takes life in Kaburini. It is not a matter of different times, the silver members of the community make it their duty to help him. The more fortunate members, such as those with employment, contribute to welfare, although they usually have little enough money.

Another source of revenue comes from the "parking boys" for whom Nairobi motorists show such little sympathy. A visit to Kaburini might make them change their minds.

Even in such a small community, there are some resourceful entrepreneurs. Apart from the shops which sell goods to those inside Kaburini as well as outsiders, there were at one time even landlords.

They used to charge 40/- a month rent for a single room in a row of wooden houses which they had built, and were themselves using only one. The rent was paid to all that, and rather than rebuild the landlords mostly moved out to other areas.

Although so willing to help each other, the people of Kaburini will not allow outsiders, even relatives, to join them. This is because they know that the larger their community becomes, the more unlikely it is that the long-promised help will ever materialize.

The question arises — how did Kaburini start in the first place? Most of the people claim they were victims of the Emergency. During that time they either lost jobs or land, and eventually, after squatting in various places and being evicted, came to the Quarry Road slum as a last resting place — and have never moved out since.

When people arrive, they have literally nowhere to go without breaking the law. With this state of affairs, somebody has to turn a blind eye, and Kaburini has lasted remarkably for six years. Most of the occupants have been there as long as that.

The children, of course, present one of the more urgent problems. All of them attend a nursery school, run by the National Christian Council of Kenya in a building whose architecture fits in well with the general atmosphere of Kaburini.

Other help comes from the Red Cross in the form of clothes and food.

Of all the problems which Nairobi faces, none has proved more intractable than the shanty towns. With so many other problems facing developers, the tendency to look the other way is great.

Perhaps the greatest tragedy of the plight of the shanty dwellers is that no one is really to blame, and therefore no one has them on their conscience. But as I have heard, when help comes it will find eager and responsive recipients ready to join in any self-help effort.

Mountain trips the latest Kenya tourist attraction

A new form of tourist activity in Kenya — mountain walking — has proved so successful that it may be followed up next year by four or five more parties from overseas.

The first party, 15-strong, consisted of members of the Ramblers' Association, an influential body in Britain which organizes outings on local hills, summer holidays and even lobbies M.P.s on such matters as rights of way.

When I spoke to members of the expedition this week, they were unanimous in their enthusiasm about the trip. They also said that the price — £185 for each member — was a big factor in attracting more visitors.

The tour, organised by the Naro Mero River Lodge, took in Shimoni, the highest point in the Aberdares, Mount Kenya, Longonot, Suswa where the party visited the caves, the Ngong Hills, and more down-to-earth attractions such as the Nairobi and Nakuru National Parks.

The highlight of the fortnight's tour was a six-day tour of the peaks of Mount Kenya, which started from the lodge and was led by Mr. Roger Higgins, a well-known Kenya mountaineer.

Although this was mainly a walking tour, some members of the party were led on a climbing route to Point Lenana, the highest point of the range.

One person who did both was Leonard Barnett, who has been on more than 30 trips with the Ramblers' Association and regularly goes for long walks over Etonshire where he lives.

Mr. Higgins told me that all the people in the party had shown a great interest in the beauties of Kenya and would certainly spread the good word about the excitement of the trip to their friends in Britain and possibly America.

He was sure this was only the beginning of a new phase in the development in Kenya tourism, and he himself may be leading one of the parties from Britain to where he returns this weekend.

the attitude of his Church, his Government and Kenya's young people. Tavares, however, looked into it, he said; adding that all member-states would meet because of what he or she were. "Anyone can wear whatever he chooses; we are proud to see attractive young ladies dress well."

New Canadians

Kenya's former stretcher artist, Alex Tavares, is active in his new home in Aroha, Saskatchewan, Canada. He has had his first North American exhibition in Regina. I hear that the small-town atmosphere has had a calming effect on his vivid colours and imagery.

Mr. Tavares, who has already sold a painting for a useful sum, plans to have his next one-man show in the United States. He hopes to be a fully fledged professional artist, living on sales of his paintings and sculpture.

On his arrival in his new home he met the first thing he would meet, Miss Susan Travels, also formerly of Nairobi, who had gone to Canada with him. I understand that two other local artists have made Canada their home. They are Mrs. Niroshi and Mr. ...

Actors wanted

This year's Christmas show at the Donovan Maile Theatre will be Love of Green Gables. The theatre's problem is that it will need to augment the company from the city's amateur ranks and it is anxious to hear from anybody who would be interested in taking part and who can guarantee to be available from early December when rehearsals will start, possibly until early February.

Age is no drawback since the characters range from teenage, or less, to elderly. Anybody who would like more details should contact the theatre at (phone Nairobi 22556). (See also Drama column).

Special cake

An unusual party was held at Jamburi Park this week to mark the 21st birthday of one of Kenya's best-loved artists, Kwaabonwu, who was last year's Champion Show artist and judge.

Kwaabonwu, who is owned by a Nanyuki farmer, Mr. Robb, was presented with a special cake and decorated with garlands and flowers. To celebrate his coming of age he invited about three hundred friends, Kikuyu, Kamba, Luo, and Swahili, who made short work of the cake. Some 100 friends were also allowed to attend.

Surgical display

An exhibition at the Soviet Showroom in Kenya Avenue, Nairobi, represents a new initiative by the Russians to develop trade with Kenya.

On Jan 15, the latest development in the field of surgical equipment — where the Russians consider them among world leaders, and offer their goods at competitive prices.

In addition to the more orthodox instruments there are also the latest development in electric equipment, including electrical methods for killing pain and inducing sleep. All these are in use in clinics in Juba and Nairobi, which will find wide application in Kenya.

Already they have had their first order based on the exhibition — one worth £2,500 from a Kenya hospital.

The latest teacher who is leaving Kenya is Mr. David Edward Panyko, of Nairobi — Catholic School, near Nakuru. He is flying to the United States tomorrow to study education and music for four years at Goshen College, Indiana.

Expenses for his education, including his fare from Kenya to America, are being paid for by the American couple, Mrs. and Mr. Panyko. They met Mr. Panyko when they taught him at Kijabe Teacher Training College from 1965 to 1966 when he was trained as a teacher.

Mr. Panyko, who is 23 and unmarried, was born in Eshoga, a sub-location of East Nyuvoro Location, Kakamega District. He was educated at Njoro School and when he left he taught as an untrained teacher for a year at Orogog School, Rongai. When he finished training at Kijabe, he worked at Njoro School, Nairobi, before joining a Catholic school in America.

"I love music and teaching," he said. "After my teaching in America I shall come to Kenya and I intend to continue teaching music, especially following the curriculum in my response to our parents' appeals to our teachers in actual by teaching them in actual."

MOMBASA SHOW

Expansion owed to effort by everyone

President Kenyatta, as patron of the Agricultural Society of Kenya, will at 3 p.m. this evening officially open a much larger and better three-day Mombasa Show at Princes' Park, Mombasa.

At the event, the third since its inception, has been recognised all bodies connected with it. Government departments, local authorities at the Coast, educational institutions, hotels and restaurants are all a major contributing factor towards the cultural and general development in the entire Coast province.

It is because of this important rapid acceleration the show is being held in the Coast, exerting on the part of the public to see. The Mombasa Show has a direct bearing on the thriving tourist industry at the Coast. This has been realised by a majority of Coast hotels which are exploiting the opportunity to expand their business.

The tourist trade, alongside the booming hotel industry at the Coast, is developing at its expected high rate, and it is estimated that last year's number of 197,972 tourists to visit the province would rise to about 231,575 in 1974. With this in mind the Mombasa and Coast Tourist Information Bureau, under the chairmanship of Miss Lorna Hills, is arranging a diary of tourist events on a weekly basis. The bureau, which will be closely liaising with the provincial administration and the social services department of the Mombasa Municipal Council in establishing tourist attractions in the province, will be running a kiosk at the show to deal with the many questions tourists present who would be making.

It will soon open up "a tourist village" somewhere in the province where tourists would at very cheap rates be spending their holiday in African style. The Mombasa Municipal Council, under whose jurisdiction the Mombasa Show is taking place, is giving the event every assistance and co-operation.

The chairman of the Mombasa Show Committee, Mr. Tony Pape, who right from its inception three years ago had worked relentlessly to bring the show to its present stage believes the Coast has great agricultural potential and would make tremendous development if these opportunities were fully exploited.

He said it was pleasing to note that more of the smaller farmers had come forward to show their animals and compete against established farmers. This was, of course, in line with the spirit of friendly competition which only brings about improvements in their agricultural objectives.

The following is Mr. Pape's full statement: "This our third Mombasa show will once again be opened by our Patron, His Excellency the President, Mzee Jomo Kenyatta. "I am pleased to say that he will see many more entries in the Livestock section than ever before at the Coast.

"The Coast Province has a great future agriculturally, and without doubt our shows and field days have done a lot to promote interest and kindness among local farmers, of whom are two members of the A.S.K. and play an active part in our show.

"Judging by the number of entries in the Farm Produce Section this year should be interesting and the efforts of local farmers to one and all to take the advantage of cultivating the land so that our country becomes not only self-sufficient in providing the needs of the people locally but also meet the supply and demand of the outside world and thus enhance the national and economic stability of the country.

Message from the Mombasa Town Clerk, Mr. N. M. Ademba

I am very happy to write a few lines on behalf of myself and fellow officers of the Council to welcome the third Annual Mombasa Show sponsored by the Agricultural Society of Kenya. The staging of the Show is an admirable gesture and needs to be highly encouraged.

The signs are that the show will be bigger and better than ever this year and I wish it every success. No doubt we shall see many entries from the farmers of Coast Province this year because primarily the show is for them.

Exhibitions not only give the opportunity to the farmers and industrialists to exhibit their products but also afford the opportunity to members of the public to witness what can be produced from their soil.

It gives great incentive to farmers to strive assiduously in their endeavours. The economy and national solidarity can be only achieved through advanced farming.

Kenya is endowed with vast agricultural land which can be cultivated, and it is my earnest request to one and all to take the advantage of cultivating the land so that our country becomes not only self-sufficient in providing the needs of the people locally but also meet the supply and demand of the outside world and thus enhance the national and economic stability of the country.

The show is also a great opportunity for the businessmen of the town to promote their trade and it is always an eye-opener to see goods now being produced and manufactured in Kenya.

Last but not least is the pure enjoyment and entertainment value at the show which attracts tourists and local residents alike.

We are indeed very appreciative to the Agricultural Society of Kenya for continuing to promote this show in spite of the very heavy financial commitments which they have to shoulder, and it is up to us all at the Coast to support the show in order to make it a very great one.

Message from the chairman of the Mombasa Show Committee, Mr. Tony Pape

The chairman of the Mombasa Show Committee, Mr. Tony Pape, who right from its inception three years ago had worked relentlessly to bring the show to its present stage believes the Coast has great agricultural potential and would make tremendous development if these opportunities were fully exploited.

Message from the Coast Provincial Commissioner, Mr. I. M. Mathenge

The Coast Provincial Commissioner, Mr. I. M. Mathenge, said in his show message that for two successive years the A.S.K. had successfully held shows at Mombasa which had greatly stimulated farming interest at the Coast.

Message from the Mayor of Mombasa, Councillor M. Kombo

The show is in a way a window through which the public can view both the production and agricultural achievements of the country, the Mayor of Mombasa, Councillor M. Kombo, said in his message.

Message from the Mayor of Mombasa, Councillor M. Kombo

The Mayor said that considering the amount of benefit that could be achieved not only by individuals but also by the country, he wanted to urge those who had no means to go to the fields and do farming to increase the country's production and make it not only self-sufficient but also able to supply other countries.

Pumps obtained from tapping in 1950 had low output of only 1200-1500 tons per day. But tapping methods have improved and the result of tapping by an improved method is the ability to tap a tree and the trunk can now carry 60 per cent more today. An important article on tapping appears on Page 111 of the magazine.

Coastal livestock up to national standard

Visitors to this year's agricultural show in Mombasa will see convincing proof of the rapid strides which have been made in the Coast Province by farmers to bring this part of Kenya into line with those areas of the country where high quality livestock has been established for a long time, the Coast Provincial Animal Husbandry officer, Mr. S. W. Sprague, stated.

He adds that the production of animal products of all kinds claiming the inspection and stamp of stockmen in all parts of the province.

Explaining his point of view, Mr. Sprague says that from the heights of the Taita Hills through the vast range area of the hinterland to the coast, "our livestock is being determined to show that though they may be new, modern livestock breeds and exotic kinds of cattle and other kinds of farm stock which are produced in the area and birds of a quality equal to the best in Kenya."

He adds: "All along the Coast to the north and to the south of Mombasa can now be found farms which are stocked with superb and high-grade cattle, sheep, goats and pigs."

"While poultry farms producing eggs, table birds, day-old chicks and reliable pure-bred and commercial strains of stock birds are family established in the province, most of these poultry products are for local consumption by an ever-growing market brought about by the tourist trade."

But this farming revolution is not confined to the coastal belt alone. In the drier parts of the province, inland stock owners are gradually bringing their farming methods up to date by improving the local herds of sub-cattle by selective breeding through grade stock. Numerous farmers in settlement areas are now also interested in keeping high-grade cows and growing the stock necessary to feed them.

In the Taita Hills, grade dairy cattle are increasingly being bred and found to do well in the hills around Wundanyi and Jersey bulls are available at bull camps in the area to grade the local cows.

Also in the hills farmers are increasing their keeping of rabbits, goats, and poultry.

"How widespread this interest and activity is may be judged by a visit to the show," says Mr. Sprague.

Just how efforts are being made to control and curb livestock diseases in the Coast Province as is done elsewhere in Kenya has been explained by the acting Coast Provincial Veterinary Officer, Mr. S. K. Mutai, His Veterinary Services Division of the Ministry of Agriculture, has the responsibility of controlling diseases through animal laboratory work.

Mr. Mutai says that the main functions of the division include controlling notifiable livestock diseases in East Africa. 'Determined to pay our way'

The Chairman of the Coast District of the Agricultural Society of Kenya, Sir Wilfrid Mavoko, said that although the A.S.K. was in a financial straits, his district was determined to pay its own way without being subsidised by anyone.

Sir Wilfrid said they believed they could achieve this aim by staging popular events throughout the year, by providing permanent amenities for the public and, of course, by giving the Mombasa Show a special coastal flavour and endeavouring to make it increasingly popular.

He hoped, and indeed was confident, that the public would cooperate with them in order to make the Mombasa Show a success.

The following is the full text of Sir Wilfrid's statement:— "Thanks to our show committee chairman, Mr. Pape, and to his committee and the sub-committees, everything is ready for the Mombasa third show.

"There are many new members this year of the different and essential sub-committees and this is a very welcome development.

"I sincerely hope this year that more farmers from outlying districts will be through the turnstiles. Although farming at the Coast generally has suffered from low rainfall than we usually expect, at least one result should be that communications should be easier and I hope that farmers will be able to organise their transport especially from Tana River and Lamu.

"They should also take advantage of the Special Party tickets for groups of 10 or which offer a much cheaper entry per head to the Showground up to August 28, and must be purchased in advance.

"The Administration are very kindly organising bazaars throughout the country districts to publicise the Show and also explain to the people the benefits of organising themselves into groups so that they can economise in the cost of travel and the cost of entry.

"Although the Mombasa Show is the highlight of the activities of the A.S.K. in this Province, the Coast District Committee have been planning more and more activities throughout the year.

"Apart from the Area Shows such as the one held recently at Kwana and another to be held later in the year at Malindi, we want to see much more use being made of the Showground and its surroundings which we hope will benefit the Society and provide amenities for the people of the Coast.

"Already the A.S.K. club has been organised and all members and their guests are welcome. A number of pleasant social evenings have taken place there and indeed the Club is becoming a popular meeting place for members every day.

"As has been published in the Press, the Agricultural Society of Kenya is a bad way financially and we of the Coast District are determined to pay our own way without being subsidised by anyone.

"This we believe we can do by staging popular events throughout the year and providing permanent amenities for the public and, of course, by giving our Show a special Coastal flavour. I hope and am confident that the public will co-operate with us."

Coconuts—a real prize for Kenya

COCONUTS may be one of the most picturesque features of the Kenya Coast, but as a productive crop they are neglected. This important article by an expert from Ceylon explains how their transformation into an efficient economic force can be achieved.

Coconut production in Kenya's Coast Province has a long history and farmers in the province have reason to be proud of the wealth from the crop they rear before.

This view has been expressed by a professional expert on coconuts, Mr. W. D. Pieris, who is currently a consultant to the Kenya Government on coconut cultivation, research and processing.

Mr. Pieris, the United Kingdom's Food and Agricultural Research International (F.A.R.I.) expert, has spent a total of 10 years in coconut research in the various countries of the world.

Coconuts in Kenya only have a small market and the Government has been unable to develop a market for the crop which has been neglected by the Government.

Mr. Pieris has pointed out that the coconut is a crop which has a high potential for export and that the Government should consider it as a major export crop.

Mr. Pieris has also pointed out that the coconut is a crop which has a high potential for export and that the Government should consider it as a major export crop.

Mr. Pieris has also pointed out that the coconut is a crop which has a high potential for export and that the Government should consider it as a major export crop.

Province is within the geographical limits of coconut cultivation. The soils along the coastal belt are good and drainage is excellent. Total annual rainfall ranging from 45 to 50 inches in normal years is sufficient to grow coconuts in the world where the rainfall range is 50 to 100 inches.

But for reasons which are still not quite clear, the palm in the Coast Province does not appear to be so widely planted as it should be. It is not as widely planted as it should be.

That was it the old Theater Royal, now the Camero Cinema, and the play was The Golden Pigeon, by Warren Chubb-Brooks, which brought West End theatre to Nairobi.

The choice of play ensured the new venture a great deal of publicity and since then the "D.M." may have had to look around — accommodation for a theatre was not always easy to come by — but it has never looked back.

The anniversary coincides with the first Saturday performance of Girl, and this is being marketed as "coming of age night". Anybody who saw the first production — preferably if you can produce a testimonial to its evidence — learn something from their advance on the advertisements used to say.

It is the tale of an elderly Canadian brother and sister who intend to adopt a girl to help on their farm but by mistake get a little girl who causes all sorts of chaos.

One of the many battle scenes which abound in the new war film 'The Devil's Brigade' (20th Century), William Holden, crouching, with Tommy-pun, is the leader of a joint U.S.-Canadian Special Force operating in Italy in the last war.

THE WAR STORY WITH A HEART

The beauty about The Devil's Brigade at the 20th Century is that for a war film it takes a good deal of time to establish the characters of the American and Canadian soldiers who are formed into a Special Force late in 1942 with the aim of invading Norway.

The police put two and two together and came to the conclusion that they had not need to go on looking for the killer. Tony Curtis is excellent as the demented man who on one side of the personality — the good, everyday side — vaguely recalls that he has done something evil.

Something went wrong with this one, which means that the great comedy about computers has will be written.

Giving men meals they will appreciate

Businessmen in Nairobi will have to look sharp if they do not give their secretaries to prefer pastures beyond their own doors.

New office blocks being erected in Nairobi have an air of modernity and convenience about them. Some of the better secretaries will find themselves working in modern, luxurious offices with air conditioning and wall-to-wall carpeting.

The high standard of office interiors being set by international companies in Nairobi is likely to spark off a chain reaction among existing companies, who will find it necessary to make innovations in order to keep up a reasonably up-to-date image.

This trend is already well in view and the largest air-conditioning company in Nairobi, Hallie Thermomax Ltd, will be responsible for the air conditioning installations in many of the new office blocks.

The managing director of the company, Mr. Geoff Bewley, forecasts that the international companies have equipped their offices, complete with air conditioning and carpets, many other local companies will follow suit.

Another company directly involved with bringing a new look into Nairobi's offices is Leonard Moore Ltd.

HOTEL BARS FILM STAR

The film actress Zsa Zsa Gabor has been barred from one of Nairobi's top hotels. The Mark Hopkins hotel has said she is not allowed to use the bar and that she is not to be seen in the hotel's vicinity.

concerned mainly on interior decoration and manufacturing decorative reproduction furniture for Kenya's more luxurious homes, but recently the company has realised orders for quality office furniture and hand luggage.

In many instances air-conditioning and carpeting have gone hand-in-hand. This, explained Mr. Bewley, is not because of any physical affinity of the two but there is a psychological one.

A new idea in carpeting, and one that Nairobi hotels have already expressed interest in, is the Cromley Decorator's Collection.

Entirely new, they are designed by top interior decorators in Britain and America. David Hicks, Cecil Beaton and John Fowler are among the designers of these carpets which range from the more traditional soft-coloured patterns to striking geometric styles.

These coloured and original carpets, particularly the David Hicks designs, are likely to be used in the more exclusive offices.

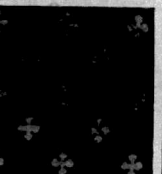

The new trend will be a boon to Nairobi's secretaries, typists and receptionists, who have long-sufferingly tolerated old-fashioned and unworn-out office desks that were stockings.

A good secretary can now pick an office where she works, and rank office decor high on her list of desirable conditions of service. Secretaries have — for some mysterious and unexplained reason — always lived with a reputation for being "pampered".

When a girl becomes a woman

When a girl becomes a woman, she needs more iron than men. Iron is essential for the production of red blood cells, which carry oxygen to the body's tissues.

She needs more iron than men

Your body must have iron. It's blood's essential mineral. Scientific reports show that women need up to twice as much iron as men. The periodic loss at menstruation means a loss of iron that has to be made up by the body.

"Next year we intend to inculcate the love of agriculture in the girls by introducing that subject and by giving them poultry-keeping, and get sufficient eggs to sell and eat well. Neither is there any reason why they cannot learn to keep fowl, milk and look after a cow."

"The curriculum includes English language and literature, history, Swahili, geography, mathematics, general science, biology, religious studies, home economics, music and book-keeping."

The monumental task of writing African history

In the few years that have elapsed since most African countries attained their independence there has been no shortage of writings on the history of Africa, or on the history of the different countries and regions of the continent and the pens of African, American and European writers have been busy. The result has certainly been an enlargement of the existing body of knowledge about Africa, but many of these works have lacked the objectivity that one expects of a serious historical work.

Objectivity is the aim of the General History of Africa which UNESCO decided to produce over a period of ten years (1965-1975), with the collaboration of leading authorities in the field, both African and non-African.

The project, needless to say, is fraught with difficulties, and it is proposed to take in the whole African continent as the area to be covered. Particular attention is to be paid to the historical relationship between different areas — for instance between West and East and West Africa — and to cultural exchanges between Africa and other continents.

A major problem is the scarcity of documents, and thus a first priority must be to collect and preserve old traditions which are the principal source for our knowledge of African history. In Africa and Africa land, the old people always regarded in the past as inferior, are being regarded in the past as the most important source for our knowledge of African history.

The General History of Africa will be written by a team of African and non-African scholars, and it is proposed to take in the whole African continent as the area to be covered. Particular attention is to be paid to the historical relationship between different areas — for instance between West and East and West Africa — and to cultural exchanges between Africa and other continents.

Historical aspects of economic relations. These sources are in danger of disappearing. It has been said that such old men that die is a library for the future. The UNESCO conference in Addis Ababa in September 1964 decided that priority should be given to the collection of sources and other operational activities.

The most practical way of tackling the problem seems to be to concentrate on different regions of the continent. In the first stage, beginning with the study of the West African situation, comprising the ancient kingdoms of Ghana, Mali, Songhai, Sokoto, then continuing with neighbouring areas, considering the relations with North Africa and the transition step by step, and subsequently extending study to Central and Southern Africa.

These meetings of experts were held in 1967 to work out regional plans and define research methods, and for manuscripts at Timbuktu (Mali).

The Niamey meeting brought out the dual nature of African oral tradition which is both a historical source and also a fundamental part of African thought and literature. It also led to the setting up of a regional centre for research and documentation in the capital of the country of the Niger Valley, but at least three other centres are to be set up to cover the rest of the continent.

The UNESCO Centre, created in Niamey, has since that time begun to publish the Journal of African Studies. and Fulani (in co-operation with research institutes in Upper Volta, Mali and Senegal).

In addition, researchers have been organized by national institutes to improve and intensify the study of Africa. The Upper Volta unit is carrying out the Moso-Dagomba project, in co-operation with the Ghana and Togo institutes; while the Institute of African Studies of the University of Legon, Ghana, in collaboration with the University of Ivory Coast, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Nigeria, Togo and Nigeria, will collect and study historical oral traditions of the following groups: Gonds-Mandri; Wasam; Akas; Ashani; Agni; Baouli; and Iwe. The Institute of African Studies of the University of Ife will carry out the study of the Yoruba, particularly in the subgroups such as the Ibadans, the Ooruns, the Ketuns and the Katsinas.

The combined operations, national and regional, should provide enough material in the second half of 1969 to begin the drafting and publication of texts derived from the oral traditions, and to begin the archiving and cataloguing of existing archives which should be made available through the publication of a Guide to Sources of African History, an exhaustive collection of documents bearing on the subject in European archives.

In this field work is well under way in the volume on archives in France, Italy, the Holy See, the Vatican, the United Nations, the United States of America, the United Kingdom, and other countries are in preparation.

The General History of Africa will be written by a team of African and non-African scholars, and it is proposed to take in the whole African continent as the area to be covered. TRAGIC LIFE OF A GREAT CZECH

THE PAIN AND THE GLORY by Liam Nolan and J. Bernard Hutton (Harpur, 35/- U.K.)

by MICHAEL ROE

Despite the simplicity of much of his music, it is difficult to imagine a composer who had such a tragic life as Frédéric Chopin. The subject of this biography, written from his childhood as an infant prodigy to his death in a mental asylum his musical destiny brought him distress for much of the time and agony for some of it.

In his youth he had to fight his father, who wanted him to become a lawyer. Having overcome that obstacle and reached manhood, he saw three of his daughters die in infancy and their mother soon afterwards.

He who studied in Sweden, where he taught for a time, but all his successes in his native land were blighted by the jealousy of his musical rivals in Prussia, who vilified him and kept up an unrelenting war of nerves that made him old before his time.

For most of his life he was haunted by the spectre of poverty. Finally, and worst of all, at the height of his musical powers he began to cough.

Yet somehow he rose above all these that he is now considered the father of the modern piano and an original and original composer.

The only monument to him, which once stood in Hamburg and was dismantled by the Nazis and sold to the French city of Toulon.

The group of 118 professors named after Heine's most famous poem was never put up in the poet's home town. Instead it was built in New York.

The works of the poet, who was vigorously supported during the Nazi rule, were in 1970, were removed to a number of other countries.

Heine, whose works, apart from his famous lyrics and prose, include essays on political, philosophical and historical subjects, was one of the spiritual fathers of German democracy. He fought for liberalisation and democratisation during the rule of the most Conservative monarchy and died in exile in Paris 112 years ago.

Thomas Mann wrote in 1922: "Heinrich Heine, one of the most graceful, freest, courageous and artistic men Germany has ever produced, would have had his memory long ago had been the son of any other country."

BRIDGE By ALAN TRUSCOTT

A thin slam

There are certain situations in which it generally pays to steer clear of a slam. One of these is where the opener does not hold complete control of the suits, and he knows that there are eleven or more points in the enemy hands. Even under these circumstances, however, a slam may still be there if the opener can judge that all his high cards are working!

South
 S 4 4 10 8 7 6 3 2
 W 3 2
 N A K Q 9 8 7
 E 6 5 4 3 2

North
 S 4 4 10 8 7 6 3 2
 W 3 2
 N A K Q 9 8 7
 E 6 5 4 3 2

South opened the bidding on only eleven high-card points on today's deal, but there were all located in the three suits bid by the partner, so there was nothing wasted in clubs. This factor enabled South to make a mild slam try after North had supported spades, and the sufficient encouragement for North, who co-operated in reaching an excellent final contract of six spades.

West led the queen of clubs, and declarer ruffed the second round and drew trump. It would have been a pity at this point to take a finesse in either hearts or diamonds, since this would have costed no more than a 50 per cent chance of success. Instead, South cashed the king of clubs, led to the ace, and then the queen appeared, he was bolder, and if he had not, declarer could still have taken back on the diamond finesse.

Fight to Free Jewish poet

A group of Düsseldorf professors supported by a student committee is waging a campaign against alleged anti-Semitic opposition to honoring the late German Jewish poet, Heinrich Heine.

The group remaining Düsseldorf after Heine to recall Nazi efforts to obliterate what little posthumous honor he has received in his native country.

COX OUTLASTS TRED OKKER

The British amateur Mark Cox caused the first major surprise of the United States Open tennis championships at Forest Hills and New York on Wednesday when he beat the fifth-seeded professional Tom Okker 7-9, 6-3, 6-6, 6-4, 9-7, in a men's singles first-round match.

The blood, left-handed Briton, pounding his groundstrokes relentlessly and often electing to stay away from the net, took advantage of the speedy grass court to knock Okker, weary from a long year of competition, out of the 1957/58.

Cox, the British number one who has won out of four in the recent Davis Cup inter-zone final match against Romania, was a recent and disciplined player that consistently unimpaired his more brilliant Dutch player.

It was only in the third set that Okker's speed and greater variety of shots proved too much for the British player, who did not win a single game in the set.

But Cox fought back strongly, leveling at two sets all, and then breaking Okker's service without conceding a point at several in the final set. Cox saved a break-point at 8-7, and then his powerful service brought him victory on his second match-point.

strongest in Kenya and capable of beating any side in the Africa Cup tournament. Mr. Ochieng is hoping to see Kenya's first representative in the event, Abaluhya F.C., who reached the semi-finals last year. "I think we can achieve what Abaluhya did and I must say the boys are fit and keen for Sunday's match. We hope to play another friendly match in Khartoum and another on our way home in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia."

Defence can't object to 'statement'

because of their "discovered political affiliations."

Mr. Waruhiri: "Do you belong to the Kenya Club?"

Mr. Kabuka: "I belong to the Kenya Club."

Asked if it was true that on occasions when he met Njenga they discussed the policies of the two parties, Mr. Waruhiri said he did not know. He thought there was something to be learned from talking about party differences.

When he saw Njenga in River Road, he said he had not seen him since about 10 or 10.30 a.m. He could not remember who he knew, but he did not know any of them.

He had never met Njenga in a bar, and to the best of his knowledge neither he nor Njenga knew of the other's living.

'No action group'

Mr. Waruhiri: "Have you ever met him in a restaurant?"

Mr. Kabuka: "We may have met, but I do not remember meeting him in a restaurant."

Asked if there had not been an occasion when he had sat back in Njenga and recalled their days together, Mr. Waruhiri said, but usually they might have talked like this on the way to the bar, but usually they did not have time for much talk.

When he met Njenga on July 6, Mr. Kabuka was coming from a restaurant.

"I did not see the accused in the hotel," I saw him on the way after the shooting.

Mr. Waruhiri asked: "Do you have an action group in your party?"

Mr. Kabuka: "No. We have one called English Oshambo, Peter Mwangi and Chebani." In each case the witness said he did not.

Asked if he knew a man by the name of Njenga, Mr. Waruhiri said: "I knew him when we were in detention, but never before that."

At the close of Mr. Waruhiri's cross-examination Mr. Hertz inquired to ask if the witness could be asked if he had been asked to join the "No action group."

Two witnesses followed.

Mr. Kimtho Thiga said he was on duty at the President's residence at Giardini on the day Mr. Mboya was killed. He did not know Njenga, and did not see him that day although he had not been outside the residence the whole day.

Mr. Peter Kimata Wachira, also a witness, said he did not leave the grounds at any time.

'£25 for gun'

He did not see Njenga or have any communication of any sort with him that day. Nor did he see a car stationary on the road outside the residence that day.

An Assistant Commissioner of Police, Deputy Director of Criminal Investigations, Mr. John Bell, who had the prosecution's case in the preliminary inquiry in the absence of Mr. Hobbis, was next into the witness-box.

He testified that on July 9 he saw Njenga at 11.12, at the residence in Nairobi, when he interviewed him on possession of a firearm and ammunition.

Describing a conversation he had with Njenga in Nairobi, Mr. Bell said he put a question to Njenga, who appeared to answer him freely.

"He stated that he had purchased the firearm which had been found in his house on Sunday, July 7, the day after Mr. Mboya was shot, from a Kikuyu tribesman named Jimmy."

He said he paid 500 shillings for the revolver and for six rounds of ammunition. He knew a licence was required but had not applied for a licence because he thought he would not have been given one.

Mr. Bell went on: "He wanted a firearm for reasons of his own which he did not specify."

"When he purchased it was wrapped in a handkerchief and it was found. He had not opened the handkerchief or touched, loaded, or unloaded the weapon."

"I pressed him on this point and he stated that he had not touched it. He stated that he had looked at the ammunition and counted it to make sure that it was unfired, and that he had counted only six rounds."

Mr. Bell said he was present when Inspector Insp. Rowe of the Kenya Police took the box out of the handkerchief and found a latent print. He testified that the witness added that he himself saw a latent print on the box.

In the course of his career, he said, he had seen many such cases. The print could not have been made where it was by a human finger, because the cylinder of the weapon closed.

On July 17 Njenga handed him a written statement in which he stated that he had been interviewed by Insp. Rowe of the Kenya Police and that he had given him a statement which he had signed and which he had given to Insp. Rowe.

He said that he had given the statement to Insp. Rowe and that he had given it to Insp. Rowe and that he had given it to Insp. Rowe and that he had given it to Insp. Rowe.

Mr. Bell went on: "I understood the statement to be a confession and I signed it for him."

On receipt of the note Mr. Bell spoke to Njenga.

"I told him that once I was satisfied as to his whereabouts on July 7 I would conduct a written request."

"He said that he could be interviewed with writing material and that he would write his statement out for me. In fact, Mr. Bell said he was provided with paper and something to write with. Mr. Bell said that he was provided with paper and something to write with. Mr. Bell said that he was provided with paper and something to write with."

The police had been told that Mr. Bell had been taken to the house of Mr. Stephen Mwangi, but that he had never seen Mwangi. Efforts had also been made to trace a man called Dick Ochiengo, but no such person had been traced.

In respect of a man called Ochiengo, Mr. Bell said he had been traced by the police to trace him, but that he had never seen him. Efforts had also been made to trace a man called Dick Ochiengo, but no such person had been traced.

Efforts to trace Peter Ombwalo, who was said to be a friend of Njenga, had also been made. Mr. Bell said he did not know Njenga on July 9 when he made the statement about the gun.

Dar witness

Asked if he had been asked to join the "No action group," Mr. Bell said he had not.

Asked if he had been asked to join the "No action group," Mr. Bell said he had not.

Asked if he had been asked to join the "No action group," Mr. Bell said he had not.

Not a confession

This placed more emphasis on the slightness of an indictment, but Njenga's case the indictment had not been a slight one — it had been a promise of continuation which had raised his hopes.

"My client went out and out to satisfy the Assistant Commissioner of Police. If this is found to be untrue, Njenga said he was not a result of a promise that the only conduct to be drawn in this statement is not voluntary and it is not admitted, and in conflict with the Judge's findings."

'No breach'

Although the statement was acquiescent as to the events of July 7, it did contain an admission as to the possession of the revolver on July 6, Njenga had explicitly admitted that the revolver was in his possession on that day.

Mr. Hobbis submitted that the statement had not been made as a result of any inducement and that the words used by Mr. Bell were simply to apprise Njenga of his position.

There was difficulty in reading any inducement into these words from Mr. Bell. It would have been possible to say that Mr. Bell had said: "I cannot accept your request because we are not certain where you were that day."

Had Mr. Bell said this it would have been perfectly right and proper course of telling this person that he was in possession of a firearm, and not to a murder charge.

Any inducement must, under Section 26 have reference to the charge against Njenga and he argued that his conversation might have had reference to a charge of being in possession of a firearm, and not to a murder charge.

Even if there had been inducement this could only have had the effect of having Njenga make an explanatory statement — with no confession of guilt or admission of infirmation and therefore it would not have been a confession. Mr. Hobbis submitted there had been no breach of the Judge's ruling and that the whole matter had proceeded from an approach made in the first place by Njenga, who knew it was open to him to write anything he wanted to.

Replying to Mr. Hobbis, Mr. Waruhiri maintained there was a difference in meaning between what Mr. Bell had said and what Mr. Hobbis said he could have said. The words used by Mr. Hobbis would have suggested complete rejection, but the words used by Mr. Bell would have implied hope because of the phrase "I will consider."

The words could not have been meant in connection with a firearm charge because it was an accepted principle in Kenya that an accused should be taken to court immediately after arrest.

This statement had been made eight days after Njenga had been arrested and charged with the fire-arms offence. One wondered whether the lapse of eight days had not destroyed the validity of this statement of Mr. Hobbis.

The prosecution can argue that this was made in reference to another offence, why should it not be made relevant at a later time? Mr. Justice Simpson said he would reserve his ruling and adjourned the court until 9.15 a.m. today.

He did not see Njenga or have any communication of any sort with him that day. Nor did he see a car stationary on the road outside the residence that day.

'Written in hope'

At the close of the submissions the two assessors were called back into court and told by Mr. Justice Simpson that they would adjourn the court until today.

Mr. Waruhiri began by submitting that the statement made by the accused was in contravention of the Evidence Act, section 26. It was obtained by an inducement or promise made by the Assistant Commissioner of Police, Mr. John Bell.

Mr. Bell, seated immediately behind Mr. Hobbis, listened intently and occasionally scribbled notes as Mr. Waruhiri told the judge that such a statement was inadmissible if the making of a confession or admission of guilt appeared to have been made by an inducement or promise.

Mr. Bell said Mr. Waruhiri had said in his evidence at the preliminary hearing that after he had received a letter from Njenga, in which Njenga said he would help the police to write a statement for the Assistant Commissioner, who would then return the materials he had provided.

"It is my submission that the statement was made as a result of an inducement or promise made by the Assistant Commissioner of Police, Mr. John Bell."

Having been told that a bond would be considered, Njenga had things which he hoped would satisfy the Assistant Commissioner, and he had written the statement in the hope of satisfying the Assistant Commissioner and

The two leaders, the Most Rev. Bishop J. Muzura and the Rev. Thomas Mungai, appeared at a statement addressed to all religious organisations in Kenya by all members of the Orthodox Church of Kenya.

The statement said: "The need has arisen for all African indigenous sects to unite and form a religious alliance to march in the present development trends in the continent."

The African communities outside Kenya should also be a body uniting all religious organisations like the National Christian Council of Kenya, the Indigenous Religious Council of Kenya, the Muslim Community, the Aga Khan community, the Bahai community and other bodies.

Libyan Crown under house arrest

The new Libyan regime was established under the control of the coup leader, Colonel Muammar al-Qadhafi, who is now in a first press interview, which is the first in the history of the country since the death of King Idris.

Dr. Busia rebukes tone throwers

The newly elected Premier, Dr. Busia has promised to govern with fairness and to respect the rights of all citizens. He rebuked those who were accused of 'tone throwing' in the past.

"We seek reconciliation," he said. In a congratulatory message President Nixon said the United States looked forward to further strengthening of the close friendship with Ghana.

Dr. Busia said the United States should not be "tone throwing" but should help in the development of a free and prosperous nationhood. He also mentioned the challenges ahead and the need for national unity.

O.A.U. FOREIGN MINISTERS TRY TO BREAK DEADLOCK

Foreign Ministers of the Organisation for African Unity in Addis Ababa yesterday in a last-minute effort to break the deadlock which has paralysed the work of their political committee.

The O.A.U. Ministerial Council was due to complete its week-long session yesterday, and the Ministers were called to a private meeting to adopt draft resolutions prepared by its three committees.

Delegation sources said the political committee had reached the O.A.U. for the new Libyan Republic regime.

In Athens, Mohamed Abul-Halim, special adviser of the Libyan on the new King Idris, occupied the Libyan Embassy while most of the staff were absent.

The student trio, who are on a course at the Greek naval academy, had been in the building in the centre of Athens.

Speaking over the telephone to journalists, the spokesman said: "We had the most honourable Mr. al-Bashir at the door."

The spokesman, speaking in Greek, told journalists that the telephone call had been proclaimed as the "Libyan Arab Republic."

Reports that the naval cadets had torn up official photographs of King Idris and strewn dollars around the embassy could not be confirmed.

The cadets said they considered the Libyan Ambassador, Mr. Taher Caramanni, and members of the staff as traitors because they had not supported King Idris on his arrival in Greece.

The incumbent ally Abdallah El-Wadwy, chief of the 35-member Libyan naval mission studying in Greece, said the cadets acted of their own initiative to take over the Embassy.

The cadets had been in touch by telephone with the Foreign Ministry in Athens which approved of their action, he said.

Mr. Slim, who will lead the Tunisian delegation to the O.A.U. Summit, said the organisation should be organised to meet the realities of the African situation from the political, economic and financial point of view.

The experience of the past six years should be taken into account, he added.

In Over, Biafra, a senior Biafran official said the Nigerian Head of State, Major-General Gowon, was making the best of a bad job.

The statement claimed that seven days ago Biafran forces had captured a document containing a "frantic" message from Gen. Gowon to his field commanders on the eve of the Lagos leader's visit to Monrovia to meet President Tubman and Dr. Akiweke.

According to the statement, the message said: "Biafran leader Ojukwu's empire must not be allowed to appear on the world map."

The message allegedly continued: "The word 'Biafra' must be erased at all costs to avoid Nigeria's economic doom."

A team of Biafran representatives was yesterday seeking support for the secessionist cause in contacts with O.A.U. members.

The Biafrans, led by the Agriculture Commissioner, Professor Eyo Ndem, arrived in the Ethiopian capital to be in hand for the sixth African summit which opens tomorrow.

During the summit the O.A.U.'s consultative committee in Nigeria will meet in an effort to end the Nigerian civil war.

They have to be available to the committee which will report to the Heads of State and Government on the progress towards a cessation of the civil war in Nigeria.

The Biafrans have so far declined to make any statement, but it is believed they are in contact with the ministers of the four O.A.U. members that have recognised Biafra - Ghana, the Ivory Coast, Tanzania and Zambia.

Miss Brooks favours both colourful African dress, including headscarves and ankle-length gowns, and above-the-knee American cut skirts.

Her coming election as assembly president is both a tribute to her own diplomatic skills and to the Republic of Liberia, one of only three African charter members of the U.N. The others are Egypt, Ethiopia and South Africa.

Murdered girl call case lighter

A trial for the murder of a beautiful Indonesian girl has opened in Jakarta and police say it would involve the names of the Foreign Minister and high-ranking Government officials.

The case, which is being reported in the Indonesian press, concerns the killing of 25-year-old Jinnia Mutia who was battered to death in her bed with an iron bar on February 5.

Dakara newspaper has speculated it was possible that the girl was involved in an international spy ring or had connections with subversive groups.

The papers said she was friendly to a number of diplomats most of whom belonged to the Embassy of a most popular Western country.

Police said in March they had discovered a list of names of Foreign Diplomats and Government officials believed to have had a close association with the girl.

Reports in local newspapers after the murder alleged that the assassin, Daester Sison, 25, told reporters in East Java after his arrest that he had killed her just because of jealousy, but police expressed doubts about the explanation and made him remain in custody.

Police said she was friendly to a number of diplomats most of whom belonged to the Embassy of a most popular Western country.

MICHAEL PARRY'S SAFARI NOTEBOOK

Ngorongoro assurances

One of the fundamental points about the changes proposed for the status of Ngorongoro and Serengeti is that no startling difference will appear overnight, never mind catastrophes. Of course, there are some conservationists who regard the reported killing of a gazelle and five giraffes, together with grass fires, as startling and immediate, besides being concerned with the proper perspective, these events are not over significant.

Among the recommendations of the Canadian survey on which the plan is based, it is suggested that the executive body for rangeland development should be the Masai Range Development Committee which has already been accepted by the Ngorongoro Authority. The committee, Masai and the Government. There is no indication of any parliamentary approval is to be sought next month to amend the Ngorongoro Authority Conservation Act.

In one of the few constructive comments made by official sources about the project, a spokesman in Nairobi said that if, at some date in the future, the Masai Range Development Committee's 450,000 wildebeest and zebra, who migrate to the Masai Range, were to be removed, the Government action would be expected.

What conservationists are anxious about, and the general public has every right to be, is the scope of the plan and what measures the Government will apply to safeguard the rights of wildlife in the area. One correspondent raised the controversy to its essentials which were to be, having noted the reply given by the Minister for Agriculture, Mr. Bryceson, he would have preferred some assurance.

Mr. Bryceson seemed to bludgeoned criticism, even conceding that he would have preferred some assurance. He said that he would have preferred some assurance. He said that he would have preferred some assurance. He said that he would have preferred some assurance.

His broad outlines were published in this newspaper because of the immense public interest in Tanzania. A proposal to interfere with the status quo of Ngorongoro and Serengeti. A proposal to interfere with the status quo of Ngorongoro and Serengeti.

Consideration tends to become clouded with emotionalism on the part of those who are eager to protect the area, and the wildlife is unstable, and those who do not doubt under the conviction that they are acting for the best, have put forward these views.

Wildlife in danger

It has been said in the past that the Tanzania Government's decision to hand over control of most of the Ngorongoro Conservation Area from the Conservation Authority to the Range Management Commission was a move that would harm the animals found there. It is my belief—and the opinion of wildlife experts at Ngorongoro—that this decision will be to the eventual detriment of these wild animals. It is my belief—and the opinion of wildlife experts at Ngorongoro—that this decision will be to the eventual detriment of these wild animals.

It is also the contention of those who defend the move that the plan to turn the land over for crop cultivation and cattle ranching will not hurt this wildlife, at least not in the long run. Letters to the Editor

One of world's greatest wonders in danger

Congratulations to Michael Parry for bringing the first Ngorongoro Conservation Area to the attention of the world, which threatens one of the world's greatest wonders, the Ngorongoro Crater. The news that 95 per cent of the Ngorongoro Conservation Area is to be handed over to the Range Management Commission for crop ranching and crop development is a disaster. It is a disaster.

REVIEW OF LEISURE TRENDS AND ACHIEVEMENTS IN EAST AFRICA

BILL DE GARIS

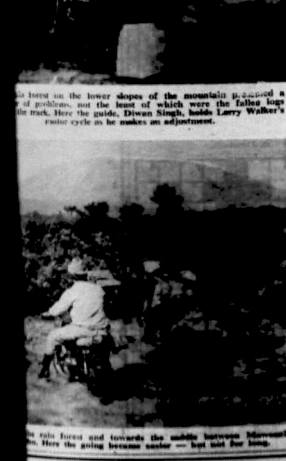

As reported last Friday, Larry Walker, an American teaching at Meru, and William de Garis, a New Zealander working in Nairobi, last week became the first people to reach the top of Africa by motor cycle, so setting a world altitude record for two-wheel vehicles. Here the couple tell the story.

Two motor cycles were taken to Lolitokok at the foot of Kilimanjaro in a small saloon car. When the bikes were ready in the township they were soon the centre of attention.

Bill de Garis on the lower slopes of the mountain. He is one of a group, not the least of which were the latter large rock. Here the guide, Diwan Singh, holds Larry Walker's motor cycle in its makes an adjustment.

Bill de Garis on the lower slopes of the mountain. He is one of a group, not the least of which were the latter large rock. Here the guide, Diwan Singh, holds Larry Walker's motor cycle in its makes an adjustment.

We waited in front of the Tanzanian immigration counter at the Namanga border post, and the official, holding Bill's passport, peered at us. "Is there any reason you can give me for not declaring you a prohibited immigrant?" he asked.

We could think of several, but got one of them would convince him. We picked up our passports and headed out the door to return to Kenya.

We had set off from Nairobi to go to Meru to climb Kilimanjaro on motor cycles, and this difficulty seemed to have put an end to all our well-laid plans. Our spirits were low, and our chances of making it to the top looked very gloomy.

We walked outside to our small saloon, inside it we had managed to pack two B.S.A. Bushman 175 cc. cycles, food for eight days, spare parts, sleeping bags, and all other things we would need for a trip up a mountain, so there was little room left for the two passengers.

The two of us had long been interested in riding a motor cycle up the side of the tallest mountain in Africa. As racers, we knew that motor cycles could go almost anywhere a person could scramble.

Two weeks had been spent on preparing our machines, and we knew they would pass the test. Kilimanjaro was no easy challenge, but we thought we could make it to the top.

Suddenly the border confrontation seemed to have put an end to all our dreams.

Instead, we decided quickly to go to Lolitokok to climb Kilimanjaro from the Kenya side. We would not have to pass through any immigration officials if we began our climb from there.

Several motor-cycle attempts had been made from Lolitokok, but none had been successful in even getting to the saddle 15,000ft. up the mountain. All the successful climbs had been made from Moshi, Tanzania, and near our chances of success looked unpromising.

As we drove towards Lolitokok through the Amboseli Game Reserve we could see the top of Kilimanjaro clearly silhouetted against the blue sky. It looked handy and inviting. The slopes did not look especially steep, and our spirits rose as the morning passed.

We drove into the dusty township and inquired where we could hire porters and a guide. We were directed to Diwan Singh, and he immediately set about hiring four porters and making arrangements for the long haul.

On the main street we began unloading the day. The people things we had packed into the small V.W. and they continued to gaze as we assembled the two Bushmans. We loaded the machines, filled them with petrol, and backed up for the long trek up the mountain.

As soon as we started to move our spirits were buoyed up by the knowledge that we were very near our goal.

Our first obstacle was the rain-forest which was littered with large fallen logs up to three feet in diameter. We filled the two cycles over the first logs but tried far back on the logs for the motor cycle and running the log while trying to lift up the front wheel found it some time. Larry soon found he could ride over extremely high logs, but quickly followed this lead, and we both were over the bushes over large rocks and logs on our way up the mountain.

One incident near the top of the mountain was successful day. Bill's cycle developed a serious trouble, and since we did not have a replacement electrical coil with us, we decided to leave it and proceed with only one motorcycle, shared between two people. The danger of this was that if anything happened to the mountain we continued to climb before dawn, and spent the night in the great high up.

Our second day on the mountain was the most difficult.

LARRY WALKER

To the top of Africa on two wheels

The mountain-climbing is a very tiring business. The main cycle was easy enough to follow in the beginning, but as the morning wore on the trail became unbelievably rough. Large rocks, steep climbs, deep ravines and scrub brush all stood in our way, and we began to ask ourselves: "Is this for real?"

Other riders had told us about this section of the track, and it had had all attempts at conquering it. We knew we had our hands full.

The footpath seemed to disappear between and over the boulders, and what was visible could not be ridden on. We were forced to make our own path through this area, and this was accomplished by aiming the cycle into a thicket, giving the cycle full throttle and holding on as the machine creased through the bush. We knew roughly where we were headed, and we did not hit boulders, holes and bush stand in our way as we ploughed through.

It was a rough way to treat the machine but it took the brutal punishment, scrambling up rock faces and over boulders. It slithered across bogs and bounced over exposed lava flows.

By nightfall we had arrived at the third camp, and we were confident of reaching the saddle of Kilimanjaro. We had climbed the "Devil's Staircase" which had overcome the other motor cyclists, and we knew that our first cycle against the mountain had been won. We now had to face the crater, the majestic Kibo.

Our guide, Diwan Singh, showed us a different route from the one taken by most tourists. We followed the main route up from Lolitokok till we were at 15,000ft., but there we branched off to go to the Crater and Round Mountain School Hut. The trail itself was fairly firm, but as soon as the cycle slid off the path, the rear wheel ground itself into the loose scree. At places we had to push the cycle, but most of the way we were able to ride it in comfort.

As we neared the Mountain School Hut the climb became steeper and the path very loose. Here we got our first taste of what our life would be like for the next few days. The slipstream up the loose scree left us incredibly exhausted, and we followed the same sequence each time we moved upwards.

Since one usually had the cycle down after a turn at pushing, the next of us would lift the cycle upright and start the engine. It usually started with one kick, and if we were tired, it was equally easy to start it with our hands by reaching over and pushing down on the kickstart. The easy starting was a blessing, for the slightest exertion at that altitude left us breathless.

After starting the engine, we would look round to be sure that either the guide or a porter was ready to help, and then slowly let the clutch out. The cycle would move upwards, slowly, and when the rear wheel started to spin, you had to push to keep the machine moving. After moving fifty feet you were left breathless because of the altitude, so you just towed the cycle down, and waited for the other person to catch up to take his turn in pushing the cycle upwards.

Occasionally there were level areas where you could ride for your own pleasure, but these became fewer and fewer as we climbed. Exhaustion at high altitudes was very real. The two cycles and our guide, set out at the top of the mountain. We had decided on a route of fairly firm scree, and we were confident B.S.A. had been left out all right at over 16,000ft., but remarkably it started to get thin. This was a painful slow way to climb upwards, but the two of us continued all day. By nightfall we had managed the cycle up to only 17,500ft., and the day's labour had left us weak.

It took a super-human effort each time to move the cycle upwards. It was a relief to leave the cycle at night, but walking down to our hut was small relief for our labour, for we knew a man had to be prepared after which we could crawl into our cold sleeping bags.

Sleep is difficult at high altitudes and we never fully recovered from the previous day's hard work.

On Sunday morning we again marched up to where we had left the cycle at 17,500ft., and three quick kicks brought the engine to life. That day we pushed our hearts out. With our goal in sight we worked with renewed energy. Finally we made it to the rim and then over the rocks to the snow inside the crater.

We had climbed Kilimanjaro, and we had ridden a motor cycle higher than anyone else in the world. Our Bushman ran perfectly at that height, but a rider was too exhausted to see straight and too tired to feel elated. Leaving the cycle in the snow we stumbled down the mountain to 16,000ft., where we spent the night.

Our aim was to take the machine as high as it could be ridden, so we crawled up the path to the crater the next morning, and fired from the previous day's effort. It took six hard hours of climbing before we reached the place where we had left it and our real work had not begun.

We fitted a rear wheel studded with spikes which we hoped would give traction in the ice. This experiment was a dismal failure, and too tired to feel elated. Leaving the knobly tyre back on the rear of the motor cycle, we pushed it up.

Then we rode the cycle around in the crater and up toward the opposite rim of the crater. It was a relief to see the snow and ice, but too soon got the hang of it and quite enjoyed this unusual experience for tropical Africa.

Again we left the cycle at the top and staggered down to the hut. Bill was completely exhausted, and was unable to continue. The next morning he began the descent to Lolitokok, where he could recover. Larry set out on a slow eight-hour hike up to the top. When he arrived at the machine he was exhausted, but he set out to find a route to the top. He tried two routes to the highest point on the rim, but to find their cliffs and ice crevasses blocked the way.

But he rode to the top of the north rim, which is the highest point in Africa to which one can ride a motor cycle. Kilimanjaro had been beaten, and a new world altitude record had been set. A motorcycle had been ridden to over 18,000ft. above sea level.

We believe there is no other place in the world where no other cycle can be ridden that high, so it is a record that will probably never be broken.

Climbing the mountain was extremely hard, but going down was not much easier. The engine was shut off, and the clutch acted like a brake. With the front and rear brakes applied the cycle would still slide down the slope.

In dangerous places a rope was tied to the cycle and a porter held on to it to keep the machine from sliding top face. The descent was slow and tiring, and it was not till after dark that the hut was reached. Here Larry got a good sleep, for he could rest easy now that he had won the battle against

"We've made it!" A jubilation broke from Larry Walker as he new from the rim of the crater of Kibo, in the background, the first peak of Kilimanjaro.

The mountain, after as many other motorcycle attempts had failed. We were thankful we had hired a guide, for Diwan Singh was excellent, showing us routes that no one else knew about, but when we were safer for the cycle, the Bushman was ideally suited for it. It gave no trouble the whole way up, started easily every day, and needed only minor adjustments to stay in perfect condition.

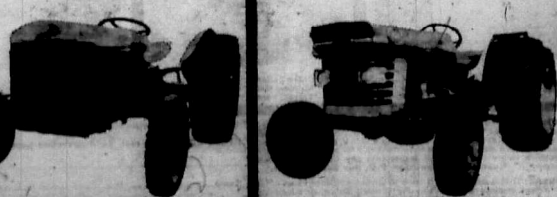

When we got down from the mountain we had set a new record, but the feeling of elation that should have gone with it was missing. Kilimanjaro had sapped us of all energy, and both of us longed for a hot bath, good food and warm bed.

Returning to normal was the greatest feeling after coming down from the conquest of Kilimanjaro.

Majestic ice cliffs and a surface of packed snow inside the crater make for road conditions not usually found even in the Equator.

World altitude record for motor cycles set by Larry Walker and Bill de Garis on a B.S.A. BUSHMAN 175cc.

Congratulations from BSA MOTOR CYCLE SERVICE - 11th Street, Nairobi - (Extensive Stock, Immediate Delivery) - B.S.A. AGENTS FOR EAST AFRICA

As reported last Friday, Larry Walker, an American teaching at Meru, and William de Garis, a New Zealander working in Nairobi, last week became the first people to reach the top of Africa by motor cycle, so setting a world altitude record for two-wheel vehicles. Here the couple tell the full story.

BILL DE GARIS

We waited in front of the Tanzanian immigration counter at the Namanga border post, and the official handing Bill's passport, peered at us. "Is there any reason you can give me for not declaring you a Prohibited Immigrant?"

We could think of several, but not one of them would convince him. We piled up our passports and headed out the door to return to Kenya.

We had set off from Nairobi to go to Moshi to climb Kilimanjaro on motor cycles and this border difficulty seemed to have put an end to all of our well-laid plans. Our spirits were low, and our chances of making it to the top looked very gloomy.

We walked outside to our small saloon. Inside it we had managed to pack two BSA Bushman 175 c.c. cycles, food for eight days, spare parts, sleeping bags, and all sorts of kit we would need for a trip up a mountain, so there was little room left for the two passengers.

The two of us had long been interested in riding a motor cycle up to the top of Kilimanjaro, for the conquer the steepness and roughness of the tallest mountain in Africa. As tourists, we knew that motor cycles could go almost anywhere a person could scramble.

Two weeks had been spent on preparing our machines, and we knew they would pass the test. Kilimanjaro was no easy challenge but we thought we could make it to the top.

Suddenly the border controls seemed to have put an end to all our dreams. Instead, we decided quickly to go to Lolokitok to climb Kilimanjaro from the Kenya side. We would not have to pass through any immigration officials if we began our climb from there.

Several motor-cycle attempts had been made from Lolokitok, but none had been successful in even getting to the saddle, 15,000ft. up the mountain. All the successful climbs had been made from Moshi, Tanzania, and now our chances of success looked promising.

As we drove in Lolokitok through the Amboseli National Reserve we could see the top of Kilimanjaro clearly silhouetted against the blue sky. It looked friendly and inviting. The slopes did not look especially steep and our spirits rose as the morning passed.

We drove into the dusty township and inquired where we would hire porters and a guide. We were directed to Dwan Singh, and he immediately set about hiring four porters and making arrangements for the long start.

On the main street we began unloading the car. The people were amazed at the number of things we had packed into the small VW, and they continued to gaze as we assembled the two Bushman. We tested the machines, filled them with petrol, and loaded up for the long trek up the mountain.

As soon as we started to move our spirits were buoyed up by the knowledge that we were moving nearer our goal.

Our first obstacle was the rain-forest which was littered with large fallen logs up to three feet in diameter. We lifted the two cycles over the first logs but tired of this labour quickly. By sliding the cycle and running the log while trying to lift up the frame at the same time, Larry soon found he could ride over extremely large logs. Bill quickly followed this lead, and we both were soon bounding over large rocks and logs in our way up the mountain.

One incident marked this otherwise successful day. Bill's cycle developed ignition trouble, and since we did not have a replacement electrical coil with us, we decided to leave the proposed route and, with only one motorcycle, shared between two people. The deflated tires were patched, and up the mountain we continued. We passed through the dense rainforest before dark, and spent the night in the grasslands high up.

Our second day on the mountain taught us the difficult lesson

LARRY WALKER

To the top of Africa on two wheels

that mountain-climbing is a very exhausting business. The path was easy enough to follow in the beginning, but as the morning wore on the trail became unbelievably rough. Large rocks, steep climbs, deep ravines and scrub brush all stood in our way, and we began to ask ourselves: "Is this for real?"

Other riders had told us about this section of the track, and it had resisted all attempts at conquering it. We knew we had our hands full.

The footpath seemed to disappear between and over the boulders, and what was visible could not be ridden on. We were forced to make our own path through this area, and this was accomplished by aiming the cycle full throttle and holding on as the machine careered through the bush. We knew roughly where we were aimed, and we did not let boulders, holes and bushes stand in our way as we ploughed through.

It was a rough way to treat our machine, but it took the brutal punishment, scrambling up rock faces and over boulders, and creased across bays and bounced over exposed lava flows.

By midnight we had arrived at the third cave, and we were confident of reaching the saddle of Kilimanjaro. We had climbed the "Devil's Staircase", which had overcome the other motor cycle, and we knew that our first battle against the mountain had been won. We now had to face the crater, the majestic Kibo.

Our guide, Dwan Singh, showed us a different route from the one taken by most tourists. From Lolokitok till we were at 15,000ft., but there we branched off to go to the Outward Bound Mountain School Hut. The trail itself was fairly firm, but as soon as the cycle slid off the path, the rear wheel got stuck into the mud. At places we had to push the cycle, but most of the time we were able to ride it in comfort.

As we neared the Mountain School Hut, the climb became steeper and the path very loose. Here we got our first fix for the rest of the climb. It was for the next few days. The effort used in pushing the motorcycle up the loose snow left us incredibly exhausted, and we followed the same sequence each time we moved upwards.

Since one usually laid the cycle down after a turn at pushing, the next of us would lift the cycle up and start the engine. It usually started with one kick and if we were tired, it was equally easy to start it with our hands by reaching over and pushing down on the kickstart. The easy starting was a blessing, for the slightest exertion at that altitude left us breathless.

After starting the engine, we would look round to be sure that either the guide or a porter was ready to help, and then slowly let the clutch out. The cycle would move upwards slowly, and when the rear wheel started to spin, you had to push to keep the machine moving. After moving fifty feet you were left breathless because of the altitude, so you just coasted the cycle down and waited for the other person to catch up to take his turn in pushing the cycle.

Occasionally there were level lava flows, or stretches of firm snow where you could ride for over one hundred feet, but those became fewer and fewer as we climbed upwards.

Exhausted at high altitudes came very rapidly. So we left the cycle and, with our guide, set out to survey the possible routes to the top of the mountain. We looked over several possible routes and decided on a route of fairly firm snow that led almost to the rim of the crater.

A six-mile walk the next morning took us back to the place where we had left the cycle. The BSA had been left out all night at over 16,000ft., but remarkably it started on the third kick. It was mainly slow work to climb upwards, but the two of us sustained all day. By midnight we had managed the cycle up to only 17,500ft., and the day's labour had left us weak.

It took a super-human effort each time to move the cycle upwards. It was a relief to leave the cycle at night, but walking down to our hut was small relief from our labour, for we knew a meal had to be prepared after which we could crawl into our cold sleeping bags.

Sleep is difficult at high altitudes and we never fully recovered from the previous day's hard work. On Sunday morning we again marched up to where we had left the cycle at 17,500ft., and three quick kicks brought the engine to life. That day we pushed our hearts out. With our goal in sight we strove with renewed energy. Finally we made it to the rim and then over the rocks to the snow inside the crater.

We had climbed Kilimanjaro, and we had ridden a motor cycle higher than anyone else in the world. Our Bushman ran perfectly at that height, but a rider was too tired to feel elated. Leaving the cycle in the snow we climbed down to the mountain at 16,000ft. where we spent the night.

Our aim was to take the machine as high as it could be ridden, so we crawled up the path to the crater the next morning, still tired from the previous day's effort. It took six hard hours of climbing before we reached the place where we had left it and our real work had not begun.

We fitted a rear wheel studded with spikes which we hoped would give traction in the ice. This experiment was a dismal failure, and an hour was wasted putting the studded tyre back on the rear of the motor cycle.

Then we rode the cycle around in the crater and up toward the opposite rim of the crater. It was tricky at first riding on the snow and ice, but we soon got the hang of it and quite enjoyed this unusual experience for tropical Africa.

Again we left the cycle at the top, and staggered down to the hut. Bill was completely exhausted, and was unable to continue. The next morning he began the descent to Lolokitok, where he could recover. Larry set out on a slow eight-hour hike up to the top. When he arrived at the machine he was exhausted, but he set out to find a route to ride to the highest point on the rim out, to find sheer cliffs and ice crevasses blocked the way.

But he rode to the top of the north rim, which is the highest point in Africa to which one can ride a motor cycle. Kilimanjaro had been beaten, and a new world altitude record had been set. A motorcycle had been ridden to over 19,000ft. above sea level.

We believe there is no other place in the world where a motor cycle can be ridden that high, so it is a record that will probably never be broken.

Climbing the mountain was extremely hard, but going down was not much easier. The engine was shut off, and the clutch acted like a brake. With the front and rear brakes applied the cycle would still slide down the slope.

In dangerous places a rope was tied to the cycle and a porter held on to it to keep the machine from sliding too fast. The descent was slow and tiring, and it was not till after dark that the hut was reached. Here Larry got a good sleep, for he could rest easy now that he had won the battle against the mountain, after so many other motor-cycle attempts had failed. We were thankful we had hired a guide, for Dwan Singh was excellent, showing us routes that no one else knew about, but which were easier for the cycle. Our Bushman was ideally suited for the task. It gave no trouble the whole way up, started easily every day, and needed only minor carburettor adjustment to stay in perfect condition.

"We've made it! A jubilee! We were from Larry Walker as he rode round the rim of the crater of Kibo. In the background the outline of Kilimanjaro, the roof of Africa, is visible."

When we got down from the mountain we knew we had set a new record, but the feeling of elation that should have gone with it was missing. Kilimanjaro had sapped us of all energy, and both of us longed for a hot bath, good food and warm bed. Returning to normal was the greatest feeling after coming down from the conquest of Kilimanjaro.

Though two motor cycles were taken to Lolokitok at the foot of the mountain, here, a small saloon car. When the bikes were ready to be taken to the township they were soon the centre of attention.

On the lower slopes of the mountain, packed as if potatoes, but the least of which were the falling logs on the track. Here the guide, Dwan Singh, holds Larry Walker's motor cycle as he makes an adjustment.

FRIDAY DIARY

Dancing—and paying—around the world

by JOHN ELGON

Two American professional dancers who are on a tour of several African countries have arrived in Kenya for six performances in several parts of Nairobi. They are dancer-teacher, Carla Maxwell and Clyde Morgan. — Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Morgan.

The husband and wife "troupe", who were seen in television on Wednesday, it self-sponsored and, to quote Mr. Morgan, "We do not have the financial support of any government agency or foundation, the funds are solely our own. Neither is this a profit-making tour but a cultural experiment."

Both have been professional dancers for over 10 years and have been described by dance critics as brilliant performers, as well as excellent teachers and representatives of America and the American dance scene.

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Morgan will be presenting contemporary dance works which are, in their own words, "strong dramatic, artistic statements from some of the leading choreographers (composers of dances) in America today."

The couple began the tour in Liberia in June this year, and visited the Ivory Coast, Ghana, Togo, Senegal and Uganda.

Their performances in Nairobi will include choreography by Jose Limon, Anna Sokolow, Daniel Nagrin, as well as dances they themselves have individually composed.

They will also give lectures on modern dance technique, dance composition, stagecraft and audiovisual equipment. The latter lecture consists of methods of recording dance and music through the use of dance notation, tape-recorders and cinema. They also want to record on film and tape as much indigenous dance and music material as possible in Africa to take back to the U.S.

Their performance in Nairobi will begin at Eastleigh Social Hall on Monday, September 8, from 8.30 p.m. followed by other performances at Punwani Social Hall on Tuesday, September 9; Kariakoo Social Hall on Wednesday, September 10; and Karikoo Social Hall on Thursday, September 11. All these performances will start at 8.30 p.m. and the price will be the nominal sum of one shilling at each performance.

They will entertain University College students on Saturday, September 13, starting at 9.00 p.m. Entrance will be by contribution. On Monday, September 15, they will perform at the Kenya Polytechnic, starting at 8.30 p.m., and entrance will be free.

Mr. Clyde Morgan received his higher education at Cleveland State University where he obtained his Bachelor of Arts Degree in 1962, and became a Fellow of Fine Arts at the same University in 1963. His wife Carla graduated from Juilliard School of Music in 1967 with a Bachelor of Science Degree.

Nancy Coggin, from Georgia, has a record for two years. She is a student, also shot record-book-size, she was on safari with her father, Mr. Ernest Coggin, a corporation president, who spent most of his time photographing his daughter's trophies.

They hunted with a senior professional hunter, Mr. Derek Dene of Tanzania Wildlife Safaris, in the Maswa and Bungeni areas. At the end of the safari, Nancy commented: "I loved every minute of it."

very well — a lot better than many here.

They found the elephant near the Jawsa River and from the distinctive tracks Mr. Dene said he knew it was a big one. Nancy shot it from about 20 yards.

She was taught to shoot by her father, who was making his third safari.

Flower show

Even though the rain pattern has been so odd this year, members of the Limuru branch of the Kenya Horticultural Society are hoping to have a record entry for their annual flower show which is to be held at the Maitai Assembly (formerly the Bradburthurst Hotel) near Tigoni tomorrow. The show is open from 2 until 5 p.m. and other attractions will be a floral section with a large collection of plants and produce for sale and retail farmhouses.

It is an excellent outing for the whole family as well as an opportunity to buy many unusual rooted plants and seedlings at bargain prices.

New journal

There has been quite a jangle of literary journals, published in Nairobi. The new one has some address in African Life.

fewer than at one-quarter throttle. The part of the boot floor above the exhaust got quite warm (no place for the butler). The boot is narrow, but useful. It is interesting to see a manufacturer introducing a two-stroke engine, when others have abandoned theirs after many years (except in Germany's East Germany, who still churn out carbon copies of the old D.K.W. motor). Daihatsu's two-stroke engine shows three advantages: 1. A separate oil feed (no need to pre-mix oil and petrol); rotary inlet valves; and a poppet and reeds.

These improvements on the standard engine, however, should have the bogie of fussiness and unpredictability, indeed I found the engine to be an instant starter (needed choke when cold) and a willing (unless petrol) performer. I was stalled once, and I could not flood it, even running on full choke.

Two characteristics remain, however, the lumpy tick-over, and poor pulling torque. The revs but continued full-speed — full-throttle running to which small engines are invariably subjected cannot burn out the exhaust valves — there are none.

The four-speed gear-box is operated via a column change. First gear (without synchromesh) is extremely low and will allow the small engine to pull away on very steep hills. The first three gears are over-spread and can give rapid acceleration up to 30 m.p.h., thereafter in top gear the car's speed is controlled by slope, load and headwind; the driver can do nothing but patiently. Cruise speed is found to be 53 m.p.h. on the level and full-down hill 62 could be reached.

Brakes are very good, as is the cornering ability. The rear end breaking away progressively when the limit of adhesion is exceeded. The all-independent suspension is softer and has more travel than I expected, and rough rutted roads could be negotiated at speed, though very large potholes or bumps would make the rear leap into the air.

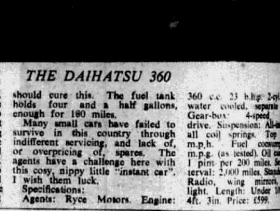

The recommended tyre pressure is 14 lb. All types of a fairly heavy car. Tyre and gear indicator are front and rear indicators and a fuel gauge. The car is a very good value for its price.

Lowly teams turn giant-killers in League Cup

Two Third Division teams, Bradford City and Brighton, stole the glory with upset wins in the second round of the English Football League Cup on Wednesday.

Bradford City humbled First Division Sunderland 2-1 on their ground while Brighton whipped Second Division Birmingham City 2-0.

Most of the 23 second round matches followed the form-book. The League champions, Leeds United, and the current Everton, both gained 1-0 away victories while many from lower divisions.

English World Cup winners England were the goalkeepers. Everton victory at Duffry Park, Leamington, was the only one.

Another England man on target was Geoff Hunt, who scored twice in West Ham's 4-2 win against Hull.

Manchester City's 3-0 triumph at Southampton.

Jim McCall, signed recently from Sheffield Wednesday for £870,000, scored the goal which gave Wolverhampton Wanderers a 0-0 victory over Tottenham Hotspur and newly promoted Derby County kept their unbeaten

FIRST NIGHT Coming home to chaos

One of the most striking things about the Broadway hit play, A Severed Head, was the undercurrent of horror that contrasted strongly with the farcical plot. The second play, The Italian Girl, adapted from her novel by James Saunders and now running at the Durban Mamba Theatre, uses the same farcical technique but without the same touch of horror.

Perhaps this is because Miss Mordant has more basic sympathy with her characters this time, or perhaps it is because Mr. Saunders has a gentler touch than J. B. Priestley, who adapted the first play and a reader to display the more callous and brutal side of human nature.

Whenever the name, the second play, is neither as funny nor as fascinating as the first. The Italian Girl involves a middle-aged recluse returning to his family home for his mother's funeral after a long absence. Unknown to him the household has developed into a hot-bed of passion and conflict, as victims of only a small, closed community can be.

He humbles and blunders his way through a confused network of spurious relationships trying to do good and ending up by apologising to everybody. The poor man spends most of the play in a state of acute embarrassment, which becomes a little funny in a great deal depending on the character and neither Kenneth Mann, as producer, nor Peter Van Diesel, who plays the part, have made much of his lack of contact with the other characters.

He is, after all, virtually a foreigner in some strange land of the household, and the disposition of the people in it, has been turned upside-down.

Unfortunately Mr. Van Diesel seems rather too much at home, and cannot understand. Only with two characters — his niece (Heather Bell) and the presiding evil genius of the house (Charles Wake) — does the real nightmare quality of his situation come out.

The situation he finds is hardly new to a brother (James Ward) deep in drink and an illicit liaison (Mrs. Wake) a sister-in-law (Kathy Maudie) driven to despair by any one of numerous reasons, and his change, changed from an All-England Wonderland into a sour little comic city.

Mr. Maggie, the Italian housemaid (Nathalie Stuart), seems to have survived the storm and still breathes some sanity into a desperate world.

Miss Bell is a superb performance, intense and powerful in its bitterness and quiet sadness, and the best thing about the evening.

Miss Maudie's more mature business is also effective, as it is Miss

Stuart's quiet placidity — though one would like to see more signs of the simmering beneath that calm exterior.

Mr. Ward, more than most, appreciates the ludicrous quality of the plot and brings to it a nice sense of comic timing, but lacks something of the grossness and loudness of his character.

Mr. Wake puts a lot of effort into evoking the comic side of things, but labours under the serious handicap that the script demands that he should be at least a foot shorter than he is. It is awkward for a jester to have to tower over his companions, but Mr. Wake does at least manage to sound small.

Njenga: the puzzle remains

Standard Staff Reporter

Just a few minutes before 3 p.m. on Wednesday, Nairobi, Isiao Nienga Njoroge, convicted assassin of Mr. Tom Mboya, was led from the dock of the High Court in Nairobi to the death cell. He was smiling.

Three burning questions remained on the lips of every Kenyan. Why was Mr. Mboya shot? Was there really a "big man"? Was the latter one of a gang of plotters? To the end, Njenga protested he was innocent, stating: "I only knew I did not commit this offence."

Even before a blaze of publicity made his name notorious all over the world, this small, inoffensive-looking man was well known in some circles of Nairobi.

For years he remained on the fringes of political influence. He was a Kikuyu man and a former chairman of the party's Nairobi Central Ward. He once worked as a bodyguard.

He was in the headlines in October, 1967, when, with a business partner, he bought a 1,500-acre property and sited it just off Bomas Road, where it proved an instant success.

At that time Njenga, from the Kiambu area of Kiambu District, ran a watch-repair workshop. He was also a company director.

For two years he studied administration in the Bulgarian capital of Sofia on a Bulgarian Government scholarship, but he was not a scholarly man. He relied on his mother language for his statements in court and his long, handwritten statements to the police was in poor English.

He soon tried for a technical position with Nairobi City Council — when his wife, Grace, worked — but was refused because he was not "sufficiently qualified".

In court Njenga's reaction — or the lack of it to the proceedings — caused strange eyebrows to be raised. During the hearing of evidence which led to his conviction, he frequently seemed bored.

He would fidget, or chat to prison warders, sometimes laughing softly. At other times he would listen keenly, head cocked to the side, but never did he show any emotion in response to any evidence.

Quicker U.S. air link soon

Pan American Airways yesterday announced a second weekly service linking Nairobi with New York, starting on Monday, October 6.

The new service, which will take six hours less than PanAm's existing flight to West Africa, will be the fastest air link between Kenya and the United States.

Operating Nairobi-Nairobi non-stop, flight will be a boon for international tourist, businessmen and cargo consignees, said Mr. Reece, the airline's director for Eastern Africa.

Dar es Salaam will also be served by the new flight, replacing the direct service through Dar es Salaam. The flight will leave Nairobi every Wednesday at 11:15 p.m., arriving at New York at 7:45 a.m. and Saturday Airport, New York, at 12:45 a.m. Every Thursday morning.

The return flight will leave Nairobi every Friday morning at 11:15 p.m., arriving at New York at 7:45 a.m. and Saturday Airport, New York, at 12:45 a.m., continuing on to Dar es Salaam.

"This new service marks the latest PanAm effort to enhance the popularity of the East African Community countries, as major tourist and trade centres," said Mr. Reece.

U Thant one cause of world slide says Mr. Vorster

The South African Premier, Mr. Vorster, has warned that "the world is gradually moving in the direction of the jungle", and said the United Nations Secretary-General, U Thant, was one of the people responsible for the slide.
Addressing the Transvaal Congress of the National Party, Mr. Vorster said: "We are living in a dangerous world. Every day there are reports of violence, civil war and coups d'etat."

NO RECOGNITION YET—Dr. KAUNDA

Zambia will not recognise Ghana's new civilian Government yet but will try to determine if its new elections were democratic, the Zambian President, Dr. Kaunda, said in Lusaka on Wednesday night.
He was asked about possible recognition of Ghana at a Press conference.
He said: "Not yet. I think it is important to study in accordance with our principles, what the last elections meant. Were they free elections? Were they democratic or democratic in military and police terms?"

Dr. Kofi Busia was returned to power last month in elections after three years of military rule after the overthrow of the former President, Dr. Nkrumah.
Since then Dr. Kaunda has supported the exiled Dr. Nkrumah, now living in Guinea.
Dr. Kaunda said he understood that in the recent Ghanaian elections some people had not been allowed to stand, but he did not yet know what this meant.
Asked if he felt Dr. Nkrumah was still the rightful ruler of Ghana, he said: "If we are satisfied with the elections we will say 'well done'. Nkrumah is our friend. Dr. Kaunda refused, as he has

do not do their duty when they should."
Terrorism, "the curse of the world", was encouraged. No action was taken when the first aircraft was hijacked and now "even people are being hijacked for international political purposes", he said.
"We should think where it will end."
In this entire struggle South Africa was a key country, said Mr. Vorster. The power which controlled South Africa, whether it be the Soviet Union or the United States, would have a greater chance of winning. Therefore, it was surprising that people of the West "who ought to realise the situation, do nothing about it."
"Perhaps this is because they realise that South Africa is interdependent to stand as a bastion against Communism on the southern tip of Africa," he said.
"It is for this purpose that we have created an organisation to combat subversion. It is for this reason that we have created a Bureau for State Security."
The Prime Minister said that one of the reasons he had appointed a judge of appeal as a one-man commission to inquire into whether the security arrangements of the Republic were effective, was that it was possible that, behind all the "noise" that had been said about the Bureau for State Security, there might be something going on.

'Bloody path for Ghana' claim

The Yendi riots, which have so far claimed 23 lives, have set Ghana's second Republic off on a "bloody, callous path", the Opposition Evening Standard said on Wednesday night.
The paper, owned by an Opposition politician, Mr. Komla Gbedemah, said in an editorial: "Our Ship of State has set sail on a sea of blood, and no one can predict the fortunes ahead."
The Standard said never had so many lives been lost in one single disturbance in the whole history of Ghana.
It said that in the interest of peace the New Prime Minister, Dr. Kofi Busia, should ask the Council to suspend its decision and give his Government time to re-examine the situation.
The country could not exchange the fits of the past for a democracy of the gun, the paper said.
In Yendi two men appeared in court accused of being ringleaders in the riots. The two, Elders of Krufo, were bound to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for a year.

Loan disbursements' attacks by Mr. Kibaki

Standard Staff Reporter
 The Minister for Commerce and Industry, Mr. Kibaki, held a Press conference yesterday specifically designed to clarify misconceptions about the distribution of trade loans.

Mr. Kibaki stressed the fact of loan distribution through the Trade Development Loans Boards, the I.C.D.C. He strengthened his emphasis on this fact by producing a detailed statement of what each district had received.

Any reasonable person with no axe to grind would agree that the figures more than justify his said.

He complained, too, that some politicians like to give people the idea that these loans should in fact be grants, pointing out that this would be absolutely impossible, and the lights should be switched on some people should ignore.

Money for the loans came from the Government's budget. The money involved must be Kenya's money and repayments of loans were made to the Government.

He said the Government had established 13 Trade Development Loans Boards to serve Kenya districts and give loans of up to £500.

These funds were supposed to be financed 30 per cent by the local authority and 70 per cent by the Government.

Up to the end of the 1968-69 financial year the Government had tied up about £600,000 with the local authorities, some in outright grants and some in interest-free loans.

The emphasis had been to direct these loans at the rural areas where the trader had no access to other sources of money.

From the table it was clear that the amounts distributed to each province were almost equal — with the exception of Rift Valley, which had more by virtue of its size.

North-Eastern and Coast Provinces had received smaller amounts, the former for obvious reasons, and the latter because — with the exception of Mombasa, Taita and Kilifi districts — there had not been an adequate number of people coming forward seeking loans.

Mr. Kibaki said the effect of the loans was dependent on the rate of repayment. As the money was being repaid, it was being re-used, in a district where default was heavy new loans were consequently slow.

Local authorities, he pointed out, should be encouraged to contribute their share, meaning that where funds contributed by the Government had been available to the local authorities that the Government is going to be very strict, and any local authority which does not contribute its share of the board of management's fund may find the Government also withholding the amount of the loan.

Outlining some of the steps being employed to curb defaulters, Mr. Kibaki said the Government was taking a much tougher line in taking back the loans from defaulters. He said that the Government had been appointed to chair the board with a high rate of default, which was a similar amount would be made available this year.

Larger numbers of applications for I.C.D.C. loans came from the municipalities, and this tended to create the impression that more money was going to the urban areas.

But it was not the fault of the municipalities, he said, there were more applications from rural areas.

Catholic bishops condemn oath-taking

Standard Staff Reporter
 Oath-taking was a threat to peace and unity, and was never taken in secret or under duress, Catholic bishops said yesterday. They said that any oath-taking which was not taken in public and with full knowledge and voluntary consent was not binding and was null and void.

good of the people," the letter said.

With Christmas, oaths were never taken in secret or under duress, the bishops said. For instance, when a man is asked to take an oath to serve God and his country, he should do so in public and with full knowledge and voluntary consent.

"It is also clear that it is working against the common good since inevitable suspicions and misunderstandings are dividing the nation, by unity and peace are seriously threatened by those responsible for this type of oath-taking."

The freedom of conscience guaranteed to everybody under the Constitution must be upheld. Freedom of worship and freedom from discrimination were also guaranteed.

"For these reasons any oath-taking which uses fear or force is seen to be wrong and against God's law. It is also evident that the use of violence or even the intention of using violence by any group of people whatever to overthrow the legally-elected Government is equally wrong and against God's law."

We urgently ask, therefore, all our faithful and all people of good will to join in prayer for our country, that peace, unity and God's blessing may rest on all its inhabitants.

Oil firms must notify union of redundancy plans

Standard Staff Reporter
 Employees to be dispensed with should not be considered on membership or non-membership of the union.

Selection of employees to be terminated should be done on the principle of 'last in, first out,' the court recommended. The companies should discuss with the union during the redundancy with the union during the first 15 days of the redundancy.

The union had brought the matter to the court, objecting to the oil companies' system of declaring some employees redundant without first consulting the union.

The companies argued that they should discuss only the details of the redundancy with the union before they were carried out, and that they should discuss only the details of the redundancy with the union before they were carried out.

Announcing what he called, 'one of the most important awards in the history of the union.'

Standard Staff Reporter
 Redundancy in the Kenya oil industry should be effected only after the union had been notified, the Industrial Court ruled yesterday.

The ruling was given by the president of the Court, Mr. Saeed Kookor, when he made an award in a dispute between the Kenya Petroleum Oil Workers' Union and oil companies.

Whenever oil companies decided to terminate the services of any employees for reasons of redundancy, the union should be notified two months before a firm notified the employees concerned and before it effected the redundancy, he said.

Written notice to the union should give reasons for the redundancy and the extent of it.

NO RACIALISM IN SETTING UP CENTRE

 Proposals for setting up a national creative centre in Nairobi were not motivated by racialism, the East African artist, Mr. El. Kiyume, said yesterday.

In an interview with the East African, he said people accused African artists of trying to isolate themselves by calling for the setting up of a national cultural centre.

But there was nothing racialistic in this move, African artists, writers and historians were concerned at the commercialisation of African culture in Nairobi.

Mr. Kiyume said: "We are not racialists, we are just trying to get together light cultural colonialism. When we sing a song about our poverty and someone else capitalises on that song we have every justification to feel depressed."

There was a need for African authors to write more books on African history instead of Kenya relying on books imported from overseas. The setting up of a creative centre would solve this problem.

Mr. Kiyume said that a committee made up of City Council officials, librarians and artists is to be formed. It would put pressure on the Government and the City Council to give the centre standard place between African artists and the Director of Social Services in the Nairobi City Council, Mr. O. O. O. O.

The McMillan Memorial Library has converted into a cultural library, Mr. Kiyume was the first to suggest this.

Tribunal hearing of rail dispute opposed

Standard Staff Reporter
 Strong opposition to a move to have the leadership dispute in the Railway Authority referred to the Industrial Tribunal came from Mr. Christopher Opondo yesterday.

Mr. Opondo, who claims to have ousted Mr. Ibrahim Mungu as president of R.A.U., was commenting on a suggestion by Registrar of Societies, Mr. D. J. Coward, that the matter should be referred to the Tribunal.

He said: "We are planning to meet the Registrar of Societies on this matter."

One objection has been drawn to a Press statement by the Registrar. Mr. Mungu does not intend to convene a meeting of the R.A.U. until then he may consider referring the matter to the Tribunal.

Mr. Opondo would like to refer the matter to the Registrar's directive to convene a meeting of the central council, as an indication with the right of the union's constitution. Mr. Mungu returns in convening a meeting of the central council, as an indication with the right of the union's constitution.

 The raising of the prize money would not provide any incentives, as the people of Kenya were already convinced of the important role the sweepstake was playing in development projects.

Mr. Bowen said controlled gambling was essential in a country like Kenya, but a total ban on gambling would be disastrous.

Kenya and Africa should avoid the image of some Latin American countries which are known as gambling countries. I am sure the Government is very keen to control gambling, he said.

Mr. Bowen described the Kenya Charity Sweepstake as the most honest form of gambling. People who had bought tickets for lotteries in countries like Malta had complained of losing money as agents sold books and did not give the money to the lottery headquarters.

Unlike other sweepstakes, in Kenya one took precautions in that all tickets leaving the office were bought by the sellers.

The case will come up today for disposal. Okudo's bond was cancelled after a State Counsel, Mr. J. S. Mwangi, offered no objection.

THE WEEK IN EAST AFRICA

Njenga sentenced to die for killing Mr. Mboya

Kenya's biggest and most dramatic criminal trial in her post-independence history, reported almost verbatim locally and covered by newspapers and radio stations in many foreign countries.

The trial reached a pitch of tension just before 1 p.m. on Wednesday when Njenga was asked if he had anything to say. From the dock he said, in Kikuyu: "I only know I did not commit this offence. Then Mr. Justice Simpson, who had just concluded a long judgment, told him: 'You have been found guilty of murder for which there is only one penalty provided by law. I sentence you to suffer death in the manner authorized by law. You have the right to appeal within seven days.'"

Njenga promptly asked: "Will I appeal today?" Moments later he was being handcuffed and led from the dock to a prison van for transfer to a jail where he will remain until his appeal.

The trial, which had lasted eight days, took place amid the strictest security precautions seen for years in Nairobi. Armed police patrolled the area, and the law courts and everyone entering the courtroom was thoroughly searched.

Outside police kept passers-by from loitering and motorists from using the City Council car park beside court building. Each day, after the case, Njenga was taken to prison accompanied by a massive police escort.

Mrs. Pamela Mboya, the murdered Minister's widow, was an occasional visitor to the court. Other personalities including M.P.s were among the public. Njenga's young wife Grace, sat through every minute of it and, like her husband, was outwardly impassive when the death sentence was passed.

The death of Mr. Mboya had given rise to tribal feelings and these were aggravated by a series of reports on circulating by Kikuyu Church leaders this week condemned oaths and pledged loyalty to President Kenyatta.

A National Covenant was drawn up by the Baptist Church in Nairobi, and more than 200 people signed it. Immediately, more support was voiced and the 100,000-strong African Inland Church issued a statement pledging their backing to the move. For Anglicans the Archbishop of East Africa, Dr. Beecher, described secret oaths as "repugnant and unacceptable."

The Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Odunga, produced two K.P.U. members who, he claimed, had been beaten up for trying to avoid the oath. A Canadian preacher in the Thika area was beaten up in an oath-ridden area because, he believed, he was suspected of taking an anti-oath stand.

The week also brought to an end the O.A.U. meeting in Ethiopia and the Nigerian leader Maj-Gen. Gowon, and President Nyerere of Tanzania, were among the V.I.P.s spanning through Kenya on their return journeys. Gen. Gowon met President Kenyatta at Mombasa and referred to him as "a great statesman."

The British Efficiency Exhibition opened in City Hall, Nairobi, with the Minister for Commerce and Industry, Mr. Kibaki, stating that productivity in the developing nations of Africa could be increased through the adoption of modern technology.

Kenya and other African countries would avoid adopting modern techniques at their own peril. He disagreed with those who argued that the introduction of new technology was bound to create unemployment. "I do not believe that the machine will replace human labour and I feel that this is a mistaken feeling," he said.

President Obote calls for unity

Standard Staff Reporter, Kampala.

President Obote called on Ugandans to assert greater efforts for unity and progress of the second anniversary of the week of Republic Day, commemorating the introduction of the republican constitution in 1967.

The President was unable to attend the celebrations marking the occasion as he was attending the O.A.U. conference in Addis Ababa. In a message read for him by the Vice-President, Mr. John Bubiha, he reminded his countrymen that Uganda, apart from its size, was like any other home which aspired to the happiness, peace, prosperity of all members of the family irrespective of their physical, mental and psychological differences.

Earlier in the week President Obote had conferred with the Federal Nigerian Head of State, Maj-Gen. Yakubu Gowon, who passed through Entebbe, at the invitation of the Ugandan leader to attend the Addis Ababa conference. The general told Obote that there was greater unity in his country than ever before.

Supporters of the Opposition Democratic Party danced joyfully in the streets when their leader, Mr. Benedicto Kiwanuka, a Karamoja advocate and a former Prime Minister of Uganda, was released from bail after appearing in court with charges of public sedition and libel. The book headed "Not guilty."

D.P. youth supporters dressed a party colours pushed Mr. Kiwanuka's car through the street of Kampala to Mulago Hospital when he is receiving treatment.

The Deputy Minister of Works, Communications and Housing, Mr. S. K. E. Dukut, told his sponsors at a seminar that a profit centre must be efficient. The Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr. W. M. Kiwuka, said that the country's economic growth must be efficient. District shows that it is a reflection of the people's realization of nation-building and progress must be generated from within by the determination and committed hard work.

Tanzanian leader in peace moves

Standard Staff Reporter, Dar es Salaam.

Interest among Tanzanians this week has been focused on the O.A.U. talks in Addis Ababa where Dr. Nyerere, whose Government recognizes Biafra, has been leading peace moves to end the fighting with the Federal forces.

On the home front the Government has declared that it has no intention to interfere with the religious faith of any person or to force him to follow a certain religion. The assurance was given by the Attorney-General, Mr. Mark Bonani, in his opening address in the Paper on the Marriage Ordinance. The new legislation will ease the marriage laws and will be introduced in the National Assembly in September. The rights of all individuals in marriage.

Construction on the second phase of the Tanzania Post Office Headquarters building in Dar es Salaam is expected to cost about 25,000, a spokesman of the Post Office Corporation revealed.

Work started few weeks ago on the new building, which will ease for more spacious public accommodation, while offering ample room for administrative purposes.

Little old New York. In a big new hurry.

These funny noises you hear in the night may just be the world shrinking. Because this fat old globe is getting smaller every day. Latest example: Pan Am's amazing new service to New York. It's a direct flight, all jet, with just one stop at Rabat. No changing planes. The only thing you might change is your mind, if the thought of Casablanca gets a little too tempting. And that's just fine by us. You can stop over at Rabat without adding a penny to your fare. And check out Fez, Marrakesh and Casablanca till your heart's content. Then it's New York. The fastest way going. And you could be on your way by this time next week. All it takes is a quick call to your Pan Am Travel Agent. Tell him you want New York. And tell him Pan Am makes the going great.

Pan Am makes the going great.

OVERSEAS RESULTS

Northern Ireland hold Russians

The Soviet Union emerged as favorites to win group four of the World Soccer Cup qualifying competition after holding Northern Ireland to a goal-less draw before 3,000 crowd in Belfast on Wednesday night.

Ireland, who beat Turkey 3-1 in their group five qualifying match before a 2,211 crowd in Dublin. This avenged their shock 1-0 defeat at the hands of Norway in Strasbourg last November. The Russians should have no difficulty in securing a second round match against the Turks.

Wednesday's kick-off time was brought forward two-and-a-half hours because of the explosive gas which filled the stadium in Northern Ireland. The Northern British Army authorities and the British Army's 160th G.M. L.C. took off at the weekend despite the fact that the Russian Soccer Federation officials would only allow the game to be brought forward to 10.00 p.m.

Ireland have only themselves to blame for not matching victory in their three easy first-half goals.

Their inside-right, Eric Keenan, was the star of the show, scoring straight at the goalkeeper, and with 12 goals to his mercy after 45 minutes.

In the 45th minute, the inside-left, Billy Campbell, beat the towering Russian goalie to a cross from the center, which was headed by Peter Barry. One minute later, Campbell, who had scored twice in the first half, found himself outside-left, but shot hurriedly at an open goal and the ball trickled into the net.

The dejected Russian team were obviously happy to settle for one point, but they were not satisfied, although their outside-left, Kholmenskoy, tried to equalize, but shot hurriedly at an open goal and the ball trickled into the net.

Some police reinforcements were brought in to patrol the Windsor Park ground, which was packed to capacity.

MILLINGTON DRAKE TROPHY

Kenya selects 19 boxers for residential training

Standard Staff Reporter
Kenya's Amateur Boxing Association has selected 19 boxers to go into residential training on October 18 under the Kenya national coach, Mr. Peter Mwambi, in preparation for the first leg of the Millington Drake Trophy contest against the holders, Uganda.

Of the 19, eight are reserves, and the 11 chosen to box for Kenya at the Nairobi City Hall on November 8 in the first leg must do well enough to ensure that the Kenya Government provides enough funds to get the United Arab Republic side to Nairobi for an inter-continental contest against Kenya as part of the Jamburi celebration, in December.

Zambia, at the moment, will probably be invited to the Jamburi event but if Kenya manages to beat Uganda in the Millington Drake Trophy contest a stronger team will have to be invited to Nairobi in December.

As predicted in the East Africa Standard yesterday the A.B.A.'s selection committee has preferred David Atan, the Kenya lightweight champion, to John Oluo to box against Uganda although Oluo is included in the training side.

Stephen Thega has been brought back to middleweight from light-heavy and Stephen 'Kimbo' Mwangi has been selected to box against Uganda in the light-heavyweight class. Isaac Kibuka, the Kenya middleweight champion, has been preferred to Peter Mwangi to meet Uganda although Mwangi is the Kenya champion.

The remainder of the team is as follows: Mwangi (heavyweight), Hassan Amir (middleweight), Stephen Baraza (lightweight), Alex Onwono (light-heavyweight) and Steve Thega (light-heavyweight) has been selected to compete in a tournament on October 6. The team will be accompanied by Mr. Hassan Amir.

If Thega acquires himself with distinction in Germany, as a light-heavyweight, he may find himself back in this class to box against Uganda in November.

pays off

Putting with a sportsman's spirit, the Kenya Amateur Boxing Association has paid off the debt of the Jamburi celebration, in December.

Zambia, at the moment, will probably be invited to the Jamburi event but if Kenya manages to beat Uganda in the Millington Drake Trophy contest a stronger team will have to be invited to Nairobi in December.

As predicted in the East Africa Standard yesterday the A.B.A.'s selection committee has preferred David Atan, the Kenya lightweight champion, to John Oluo to box against Uganda although Oluo is included in the training side.

Stephen Thega has been brought back to middleweight from light-heavy and Stephen 'Kimbo' Mwangi has been selected to box against Uganda in the light-heavyweight class. Isaac Kibuka, the Kenya middleweight champion, has been preferred to Peter Mwangi to meet Uganda although Mwangi is the Kenya champion.

The remainder of the team is as follows: Mwangi (heavyweight), Hassan Amir (middleweight), Stephen Baraza (lightweight), Alex Onwono (light-heavyweight) and Steve Thega (light-heavyweight) has been selected to compete in a tournament on October 6. The team will be accompanied by Mr. Hassan Amir.

If Thega acquires himself with distinction in Germany, as a light-heavyweight, he may find himself back in this class to box against Uganda in November.

Young Africans concede seven

The Young Africans of Kampala defeated against Sogal (Kenya) in the second match of the African Cup tournament. The Young Africans scored seven goals to Sogal's one.

The Young Africans scored goals in the 15th, 25th, 35th, 45th, 55th, 65th and 75th minutes. Sogal scored a goal in the 85th minute.

The British woman pilot, Miss Sheila Scott, who arrived in Nairobi on a record-breaking flight from London last weekend, has been spending most of the week at the Coast. She was flown to the Mbaraki Club at Kilifi, on Monday, by Mr. John Williams of Wilton Aviation Ltd., whose company is servicing her aircraft for the East African Flying Safari this weekend. After the safari Miss Scott will fly South to make an attempt on the Cape Town to London single-engine flying record. She is pictured here about to open her hand at sailing.

MOTOR NOTES
Tested without leaving plant
Out of reach, perhaps, of all except the ambassadorial and ministerial set, the new Lincoln Continental has been redesigned to keep it among the world's top cars, and possibly America's finest.
Puffed along by Lincoln's new 7-litre V8 engine, fuel from a 24-gallon tank, it offers a host of proven safety and comfort features, but remains essentially a luxurious conservative car.
Available options include remote-controlled power windows and doors and a power steering.

On way to achieving ambition

A young man from Nairobi who hopes to make his name in British theatre is Shady Mwangi who has just become an associate of the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art. His ambition is to play at the Royal Shakespeare Theatre.
Mr. Mwangi, who is 24, has been actively interested in theatre for about ten years. He worked with some of the leading groups in Nairobi and became a busy busy by the theatre bug that about 21 years ago he left his job as a photographer with the Kenya Police and headed for London to study.
Most of his study has been done in his spare time as he had to find himself a job to keep himself going. But now that he has a professional qualification in his pocket he hopes to be able to work full time in the theatre.
Last year he won a first prize for acting at the Edinburgh and North London Music Festival.
News of his success has persuaded his younger brother, Bado, who is still in Nairobi, that it is time he, too, set out on a professional theatrical career. He hopes to go to London to study.

30-minute Moonwalk film on TV tonight

Reviewed will not be seen tonight at 8.00. In its place television viewers will see Apollo-11 Special, a thirty-minute edited version of the landing on the Moon on July 20 and the Moonwalk of July 21. This should have been done during the normal week of August and mentioned that it would be, but had not happened. It is a remarkable film when it is considered that it was only taken for five days of the Moon walk.

CHILDREN'S HANDWRITING COMPETITION

Chance and challenge for East Africa's children

MANY VALUABLE PRIZES

As a result of the successful contests held in the last three years and with the support of the Kenya Ministry of Education, we announce today details of the 1969 Children's Handwriting Competition.

Due to the great help provided by teachers, a record number of nearly 11,000 children entered the competition last year and with some splendid prizes to be won once again a bumper entry is expected in the coming contest. As usual the competition is organized by the East African Standard and the Platinum Pen Co. and is open to all schoolchildren in East Africa. Children from Tanzania and Uganda as well as Kenya have won prizes in previous years.

The purpose of the contest is to encourage good handwriting among children and to assist in promoting good handwriting movement among educationalists.

No particular style of writing is required but in the final selection the committee will pay particular attention to legibility, spacing, grace and character. There are the only yardsticks by which the handwriting will be judged. Particular styles such as italic, cursive and Marion Richardson, will have equal chances.

on one side of a sheet of paper.

3. The name and age of the pupil must be written on the top left-hand side of each entry and the group and school on the top right-hand side. Groups are divided as follows:

(a) Middle Primary Standard P.V-VI
(b) Upper Primary Standard VI-VII
(c) Full post-al, address of the school should be given including not only the town but also the district. It would also be helpful if each entrant were to put his full home address on the back of his entry so that no delay is incurred should the organizers wish to get in touch with any entrant during school holidays.

4. When there are more than one entry, a single signed declaration may be attached to cover all the entries. The declaration must be signed by a class teacher or head of the school concerned.

5. Entries are not returnable and no correspondence can be entered into. The decision of the Editor shall be final.

MINISTER WELCOMES CONTEST

The Kenya Minister for Education, Dr. Kioko, writes the following message:

I am very pleased to note that the children's handwriting competition is being held again this year. It has become a regular event in the latter half of the year and it is still growing in popularity.

I wish to congratulate the "East African Standard" profoundly for successfully showing all students and pupils alike the importance of good handwriting. My Ministry will continue to give the competition full support.

I hope all headmasters will encourage children in their schools to make an attempt and that they will submit the more promising work as entries in the competition.

J. KIRONYO KIOKO,
Minister for Education.

The contest is split into three divisions, the winner of each being awarded a prize of one of the Platinum pen sets. Two sets will also go to the runners-up in the different classes. There are also prizes for the schools from which the winning competitors enter.

A fourth cycle will be awarded at the discretion of the judges.

Teachers are asked to encourage their pupils to take part as good handwriting is considered one of the finest skills that education can give to young people.

News of the progress of the contest will be given in the Friday magazine issue of the East African Standard during the coming weeks.

CONDITIONS OF ENTRY

The rules of the competition are as follows:

1. All entries must be post-marked not later than October 20, 1969.

CHILDREN'S STORY

by CYNTHIA HUNTER

The twins who went their separate ways

Sarah and Sally were twins and their mother was very proud of them because they were both strong and healthy. Lots of friends and relations went to see them when they were born. Many shook their heads and said it was bad to have twins because one would grow up much weaker than the other. But not Sally and Sarah. They smiled at the same time, crawled at the same time and walked at the same time. They looked exactly alike, but they were quite different in character. Sarah was a model of good behaviour but Sally was always up to mischief.

When they were old enough to help their mother with the house-hold chores, Sarah would take a broom and sweep the floors, but before their mother came in, Sally would bring the leaves and mud from the garden and make everything dirty and untidy again. It was then Sarah who got into trouble for not doing her job properly.

When the twins were four they had been offered a job at the bank. They had a small house with a very tiny garden. Their mother gave each of them some plants and they could each have a tiny flower-bed. Sally could not wait until her plants had time to take root and she kept digging them up so she if they had grown. Sarah waited here every day and waited patiently for several months. At last some beautiful blue, red and yellow flowers appeared. Sally was so jealous that she dug up the plants and put them in her garden. But she would not do that. Her mother and father, and to Sarah's sorrow, they died.

The following year the twins moved to the town as their father had been offered a job at the bank. They had a small house with a very tiny garden. Their mother gave each of them some plants and they could each have a tiny flower-bed. Sally could not wait until her plants had time to take root and she kept digging them up so she if they had grown. Sarah waited here every day and waited patiently for several months. At last some beautiful blue, red and yellow flowers appeared. Sally was so jealous that she dug up the plants and put them in her garden. But she would not do that. Her mother and father, and to Sarah's sorrow, they died.

The following year the twins moved to the town as their father had been offered a job at the bank. They had a small house with a very tiny garden. Their mother gave each of them some plants and they could each have a tiny flower-bed. Sally could not wait until her plants had time to take root and she kept digging them up so she if they had grown. Sarah waited here every day and waited patiently for several months. MUSIC and nightlife

Night club opened at Machakos

By ELIJAH KITUMA

Machakos, the place where the first drum and trumpet were sounded when European arrived, has changed and now, in only the sound of entertainment is heard.

Ever since Machakos was built by the Europeans 70 years ago, there has never, to my knowledge, and I hope those who know Machakos better, been a house of entertainment in the area that was not until 1967 that a young, conscious and hard-working man thought of starting the town's first night club.

Mr. Mathew Mutiso, a former bank clerk and now private lecturer at the University of Nairobi, recently saw his dream become a reality.

He negotiated with a landlord who gave him premises which in turn he occupied and named it now known as the Masaku Night Club.

It is the only entertainment centre in the town and even on Sundays every night there are dances and weekends when there are live bands.

Every kind of music is played in the club. It is a place where you can go to enjoy themselves and exercise instead of wasting their time in bars.

The first band to play in the new club was The Hot Five from Kisumu.

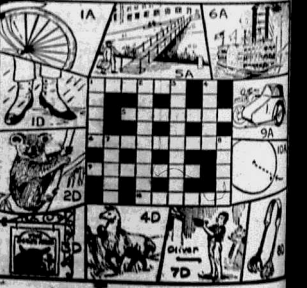

The present band was a local one, The Fighters, a combo performing hot too", he told me.

The bands which play at the club were full-time and were paid monthly.

Mr. Mutiso did not want to improve the club and wanted to come any criticism and suggestion.

Helel Williams was on holiday from work.

BOOK REVIEWS

Nairobi lecturer's account of wartime Britain wins acclaim

Dr. Angus Calder is a 37-year-old lecturer in English literature at University College, London...

THE PEOPLES WAR: BRITAIN 1939-45, by Angus Calder. Cape 65/- (British).

By HARRIET JILLINGS

Yet this month has seen the publication of his second book, The Peoples War, and it has already raised quite a stir in England...

Sunday, and The Observer is running extracts from it in its colour supplement. Angus Calder sees the war as a great leveller...

cal research" said Angus. "But that's a different thing." Angus is by training neither a historian nor a politician...

The author's literary knowledge gives the book an added dimension. He has been able to draw on the novels of, for instance, Evelyn Waugh, Orwell, Henry Green and others...

Dr. Angus Calder

bad" at present because he has not written one for several weeks. "What about novels? Every time I read a fiction review - which is rare - I get the feeling that it's a mistake to publish novels at all today..."

Anyone who lived in Britain throughout this time will find the book extremely evocative and nostalgic.

Angus himself is too young to remember the war, though he tells the story of how, at the age of three, he ran through the forest of Bedfordshire kicking up the pine-needles and shouting "Bomb! Bomb!"

I asked Angus if he had plans for doing any creative writing of his own. He said he had written poems for Glaxo and Bazaar in East Africa and has contributed to the New Statesman and P.E.N. Anthology of Modern Poetry.

All the time the author's sympathy is with the working class. The book is written from the point of view of an ordinary man...

What about the vast amount of scholarly research which he has done? "I asked Angus if he thought the book established him as a historian and he replied quite vehemently: "Definitely not. I can't do it. Anyway, no historian would recognise my credentials."

"Ah, I know how to do history," he says. "I know how to do history."

THE RATIONALE BEHIND THE LIBERATION STRUGGLE

THE STRUGGLE FOR MOZAMBIQUE by Eduardo Mondlane, Penguin African Library 6/- (British)

By PUS GEORGE OROTHI

Despite its modest title, this book is a major contribution to the knowledge of Portuguese colonial practice and especially the liberation struggle being waged in Mozambique and other Portuguese enclaves.

It also answers the question why a tiny and impoverished country like Portugal has been able to keep its grip on Africa for many years.

How does he feel about being in East Africa? "Well, as a Doctor of English Literature I have rather a bad conscience. What Kenya really needs is technical experts, doctors, engineers and so on. But I do think academic life is terribly important, and I love teaching."

Dr. Mondlane makes a scathing indictment of Portuguese colonialism, describing the brainwashing aimed at persuading natives that they were in fact liberating themselves from the yoke of slavery in the assimilado system, and condemns Portuguese rule on Africa and against the world to revolt against what he described as slavery in Mozambique.

The author also condemns the Catholic Church in Portuguese territories for contributing to the continuation of Portuguese colonial rule. He states the racial structure of Mozambique in Mozambique, the role of South Africa and Rhodesia in the war in his country and his appeals to African States to give more aid to the liberation armies of the Portuguese colonies.

Weak, sickly and almost without arms, but with a strong will to push on, the guerrilla intensified recruitment of new fighters from the ranks of peasants in the Serra Maestra, the rural highlands of Cuba.

For the next two years, hunted by tanks and subject to brutal reprisals by the local residents, the ragged band made dramatic advances in policy in "New Mozambique" campaign which swept Cuba out of the greatest liberation struggle of the century.
