THE ostrich is as curious as it is beautiful. With his long bare neck and legs, and North Eastern regions of Uganda the local tribes keep them as pets and periodically denude them of their feathers which they use to decorate elaborate head-dresses of the dancers. Hundreds of small fragments of shell are strung together to make necklaces for their women, and some of the most primitive natives use the large shield for carrying water. Although Africa has advanced considerably during the past seventy-eight years since Smith Mackenzie and Company Limited first opened up, many of the old native customs still prevail but modern methods are gradually replacing the old. The development of this country has been a mammoth job and we look back with pride on the part we have played in it.

An all inclusive holiday to Murchison Falls

Murchison Falls — one of the world's most incredible sights where the Nile rushes through a cleft in the rocks less than 10 feet wide, then drops some 400 feet in a series of cascades to the level of Lake Albert. And the Park itself — one of the world's finest game sanctuaries where opportunities for photography are unequalled for the river is the animals' chief source of water. In the safety of the launch you can watch animals of every sort in their natural surroundings.

After visiting the Falls the tour continues down the Albert Nile to Jinja on the Sudan Border.

The farmers of the White Highlands of Kenya are the backbone of the colony's economy. Despite imminent difficulties they have done much to make Kenya a land of increasing prosperity and opportunity for all who live there. They have built homes and made themselves out of a waste of savanna. The majority of these farmers have long been members of The Kenya Farmers' Association (Co-op.) Ltd., an association which has always placed the interests of the farmer and the farming industry in the forefront of all its transactions.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

A KENYA OFFICE IN LONDON has been suggested by Mr. Bruce McKenzie, president of the Royal Agricultural Society of Kenya. According to local reports, he told Nairobi Rotary Club on returning from a brief visit to England that Kenya received great publicity from its stand at the Royal Agricultural Show at Norwich, that the Kenya Public Relations Office in London had not shown itself properly organized to follow up the resultant opportunities, that the East African Office in London did not seem of much use to Kenya, that Uganda was building a house of its own in Trafalgar Square, and that Kenya might need similar representation in the Mother-Country. Doubtless the criticisms were less sweeping than the brief Press summaries suggest, for in their abbreviated form they convey impressions which are inaccurate. To take the first statement first, it is true that great publicity was given in Kenya newspapers to the Kenya stand at Norwich, but that is only part of the story; the Press in this country could scarcely have taken less notice of the event.

One elementary reason is that newspapers in the United Kingdom were not adequately fed with information which might have interested them. Even publications emphasis may have received nothing. If our own experience was anything like what was not done — and there is no reason to think otherwise — factual information was not supplied even when it had been invited. EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA made two separate requests for material, including a complete list of the people from Kenya who were helping on the stand, with the intention of publishing the names of the thirty or forty persons concerned. Both requests, made through two separate channels, went unanswered. It was in the Press of the United Kingdom, of course, not that of Kenya, that it was important for Kenya to obtain publicity; but it was certainly not received. Only a few days ago one of the best-known men in the Highlands of Kenya said to us in the course of conversation: "In Kenya papers there have been acres of publicity about the show at Norwich, but I have found practically nothing in newspapers in England". Many other people on leave from the Colony must have had similar regrets.

Far from agreeing with Mr. McKenzie in his advocacy of more separatism and sectionalism in the representation of East Africa in London, we hold that what has occurred in recent years has been disadvantageous. Nearly a third of a century has passed since the East African Office was opened in London as a projection of the Governments of the territories, but throughout the whole of that period it has received from those Governments and the non-official communities under their jurisdiction nothing like the support which has been given by Rhodesians to their representatives in London. Rhodesia House in the Strand and the Northern Rhodesia Office in Haymarket have been regarded with increasing pride by Rhodesians, practically none of whom comes to London without paying a courtesy call on one or both addresses, so that there is considerable contact from which both parties gain. In no time in the last three decades has a similar sense of loyalty been shown by the East African Dependencies to their Office in London, which has frequently not been sent important documents until long after they had reached our own office. Mr. McKenzie may have been unaware of these and other facts, but his comments make it necessary to publish enough to indicate that criticism should first be directed within Kenya, and to official and non-official quarters alike. We have no hesitation in asserting that the blame for shortcomings in the East African Office, of which successive Commissioners have been fully aware (and about which they doubtless made appropriate submissions) rests primarily upon the authorities in Africa.

In recent years the London Office has been dealt two heavy blows by the decision of the Government of Kenya to have its own public relations office outside the East African Office, and Who Should be Blamed? by Sir Andrew Cohen's decision to establish representation for Uganda in a separate building. Both steps we regarded and still regard as most unfortunate. Uganda's action was dictated by purely political considerations; in plain words, by a resolve to appease the African nationalists in that territory who wanted to weaken the East Africa High Commission, to which the London Office is responsible. As to Kenya's action, when the Kikuyu rebellion broke out five years ago there was a case for the appointment of someone who could explain the background to journalists in the United Kingdom, but it was certainly neither necessary nor desirable to provide that service outside the East African Office which should have had its own public relations officer years earlier, but is still denied a member of the staff for that essential duty. To say that the Office is not of much use to Kenya from the publicity standpoint when it has never had such an official is to put the responsibility in the wrong place. Censure should have been addressed to the Government and the Legislative Councils of Kenya, Uganda, and Tanganyika Territory.

Rhodesia House might well be taken as East Africa's model; and as the High Commissioner for the Federation is Sir Robert Rennie, who was for some years Kenya's devoted Chief Secretary and Member for Development and Reconstruction, he could be counted upon to give all possible help with alacrity. East Africa does not, of course, require such extensive services and staff as the Federation, but until the territories have in their London Office a carefully chosen public relations officer they cannot expect to get that attention in the newspapers of Great Britain which any able, experienced, alert, hard-working, and respected expert could soon obtain. Southern Rhodesia neglected the question of publicity for many years, but when at long last the error was recognized and a competent and keen man attached to the High Commissioner, the situation quickly changed. Southern Rhodesia, and now the Federation, thereafter took this matter seriously, and their public relations attachés (for they have been increased in number and deservedly raised to that rank) have won and held the confidence and regard of those who are in close touch with them and their work. Journalists of many nationalities in London have frequent proofs that they thoroughly understand Press problems and requirements, that they are promptly briefed from Africa on all important issues, that they give candid replies to any questions put to them, and that they often anticipate the needs of newspapers. In short, they have made themselves of real value to the countries they serve to Rhodesia House, and through the Press to the public in this and other countries.

The tragic contrast with what has not been done, and for East Africa has been known for years to the official and non-official leaders of Kenya, Uganda, and Tanganyika Territories. Other sources of Long Tale information apart, we ourselves have emphasized these facts on score of occasions.

Many of the official and non-official leaders with whom we have discussed these matters have expressed the intention of demanding appropriate action, but nothing has resulted. Two of the probable reasons are that the Legislatures have never taken the question of public relations seriously, and that interterritorial relations have never been as satisfactory as they could and should have been made. The assumption of a common approach through the High Commission has often been reduced to mere pretence because a Governor of one or other territory could and often did frustrate what ought to have been common policy, and sometimes what had been formally agreed; and at no time have non-official members of the three Legislatures co-operated to defeat such obstructionism. They must therefore share the responsibility for what has remained undone. As to the narrower matter of publicity for Kenya, let it not be forgotten that one of the most fatuous reports ever accepted by that Colony's Legislature was on the subject of information.

Notes By The Way

Lord Althorpam

THE EDITOR has frequent proof of the tendency of the public to misjudge as a result of reading brief extracts which do not fully represent the longer article from which they are taken. Lord Althorpam, who spent his early years in Kenya, when his father, then Sir Edward Grigg, was Governor of Kenya, must have reflected recently on this risk. During the past fortnight continually has been heard criticism from many parts of the world in consequence of statements about Dr. Nyerere which he made in the current issue of the National African Review, which he thought the article contains grossly discourteous if it is not impudent of a republican, as will have been assumed by many people who have read only short extracts in popular newspapers and some of the more serious protests at the offensive personal remarks to their Majesty. Those who have seen the full article will recognize that the writer is a monarchist and it is not fair to make that clear. Only a few readers of this paper are likely to see the five-page statement which has caused the furor.

Arrogance and Impertinence

THE WORDS do not of course imply condonation of the arrogance and impertinence of a part of the realm in references to him. However, such as his remarks would be inexorable to written about any person. Lord Althorpam's offence is aggravated by his own recognition of this fact before he sent what he had written to the printers. In the article contains these words: "These foregoing remarks may have struck some readers as intolerably disrespectful — a plain case of des majesté. I am quite unrepentant." This 33-year-old peer who declines to take his seat in the House of Lords because he disapproves of hereditary titles but nevertheless uses the title day by day — will not quickly be forgiven for his undivulged comments. Had he not written out his title it is extremely unlikely that any particular notice would have been taken of his article even in Fleet Street's so-called silly season.

Tanganyika's Legislature

MR. JUNIUS NYERERE's appointment to the Legislative Council of Tanganyika by the Governor was, I think, have been generally approved by Europeans in the Territory, if only on the good East African principle of electing a troublesome member to the club committee in order that he may have to justify his words among those who know rather more about the question than the complainant. T.A.N.U. has, in fact, received two nominations; the second being that of Mr. Emmanuel. That makes it the more regrettable that Mr. Emmanuel should have been dropped, especially as he has done and is doing most useful and self-sacrificing work for the United Tanganyika Party, the only body which has carried opposition to T.A.N.U. into the countryside. Its supporters will now claim that T.A.N.U. has gained greatly at the expense of the U.T.P. It will also be widely believed that Mr. Emmanuel has not been re-nominated because he made blunt and telling criticisms of the Technical and Public Works Departments some months ago. While I do not suggest that his omission from the new council results from either of these causes, it does seem to be unfortunate on both counts, and also because the large and influential Hellenic Community is deprived of a member on whom unusual confidence can rest, and not by Greeks alone. Mr. Emmanuel has an enviable record of well-being in Tanganyika, of which he has shown himself a most public-spirited citizen, and his disappearance from the legislature is greatly to be regretted.

Strange Days

IN THE PICTURED, a London daily newspaper which is edited by another Mrs. Junius Lait, an English, goes out to encourage co-operation between Europeans, Africans and Asians in Tanganyika and its freedom from riots mainly to Mr. Nyerere and his followers, and to describe their behaviour as dignified and decent. It is marked by a standard of discipline which Europeans and Asians should follow. The impressiveness of the preceding quotations — which would have been difficult — is unfortunate. They have been given to a publication which has a world audience. The Government of Tanganyika has treated Mr. Nyerere and his organization with astonishing tolerance, but it had at last to forbid meetings and arrest and imprison a number of T.A.N.U. officials precisely because they lacked restraint and discipline and stirred up trouble which threatened to affect interests. Mrs. Lait's knowledge of T.A.N.U. is manifestly defective. The findings of the courts are more reliable. It is some of the African leaders in Tanganyika, not Europeans and Asians, who need to give proof of the qualities mentioned in a very strange letter.

Generosity Unquited

AN ARTISAN employed by one of the mining companies in Northern Rhodesia, not long ago earned rather more than £200 a month, invites my sympathy with the demand of the union for an increase of 15% in the basic rate of pay by telling me that, in consequence of the drastic reduction in the copper boom, his pay is not now much over the £100 mark. What he does not say is that if he had been employed by a company outside the mining industry he would have received throughout approximately his present rates of pay. Nor does he mention that he and his wife have had all sorts of advantages at the cost of the employers, in particular, a good house for about £4 a monthly, when similar accommodation in the free market would have cost about ten times that token figure. What reciprocity have the members of the union shown for the generosity with which they have been treated? The answer is that there have been no fewer than thirteen strikes since the beginning of this year.

Interested in the Federation

A LEADING HOTEL group in the United Kingdom, Trust Houses, Ltd., took power at the recent annual general meeting of the company to operate outside the United Kingdom if and when the directors deem that course to be wise. Since I happen to know that representatives of the board have recently visited Southern Rhodesia, it seems to me possible that this change in the articles of association has been made because there is a possibility of this well-known hotel enterprise extending its interests to the Federation.

Objective of British Policy in Kenya Should be Defined

Statement by Mr. Mboya Before His Departure from London

MR. TOM MBOYA, leader of the African Elected Members in the Legislative Council in Kenya, told journalists before he left London last Friday to fly back to Nairobi that he and his colleague, Mr. Ronald Ngala, had met the Secretary of State for the Colonies on three occasions, and Mr. Shattoo, Asian Minister of Works in Kenya who has reiterated Asian support for increased representation in the Legislature, for increased representation in the Legislative Council that there had been no formal or informal contacts with the European political leaders from Kenya who have been in London at the same time.

H.M. Government had been asked for a clear statement of the ultimate objective for Kenya. That was urgently necessary, because there could otherwise be no hope of reaching agreement in the talks in which the Secretary of State would participate when he flew to Nairobi in October.

Objects to Military Base

Recent statements in Kenya by two of the European Elected Members, Mr. Humphrey Slade, their vice-chairman, and Mr. Shirley Cooke, who had resigned from the European Elected Members' Organization in protest against its reactionary attitude, showed that it was the European leaders who were the stumbling-blocks, not the Africans. The Europeans were not united and were not agreed about policy. How could Africans feel encouraged to negotiate with European leaders who talked about liberalism in their own time? At least, the African Elected Members would do their best to try to secure a solution.

Because of the political implications they still objected to the establishment of a military base in Kenya. Cyprus has shown that the existence of a military base could make the strategic interests of Britain dominant when considering local affairs. Moreover, a base would affect the local social and racial situation by seeming to strengthen the claim of the Europeans to a dominant position. When Africans had an effective say in the Government of Kenya they would consider the question of a base on its merits.

Declaring that the Capricorn Africa Society had the right to claim a large following among Africans in Kenya, Mr. Mboya said that not one of the eight Africans who had been elected to the Legislative Council had ever been a member of the society or sympathized with its doctrines.

Qualitative Franchise Unacceptable

"I do not accept its idea that the vote is a responsibility, not a right," Mr. Mboya continued. "I believe that all people in a community must have the right to vote and must be treated as equals within the State and Society. There can be no grading according to wealth, education, or social standing."

"We will not accept a qualitative franchise. We want a universal franchise. For the next election, when we get increased representation, we might, as a matter of convenience, accept the present qualitative franchise, but we shall demand a universal franchise for the election after that."

MR. NGALA said that he endorsed all that his colleague had said.

When asked if he was not the only African member of the Legislature with personal experience of a multi-racial local government body which was generally understood to have worked satisfactorily, he replied that the Mombasa Municipal Board was not satisfactory, and that the African Advisory Council in Mombasa had recently lodged complaints with the responsible Minister, as he himself had also done.

European, Indians, Asians, and Arabs lived in all the eight wards in Mombasa, and he thought that all races of all races should have equal voting rights, and that each ward should vote for candidates for the board without regard to race. Mr. Ngala denied that that would mean domination by Africans, but declined to indicate the probable racial composition of the board if such were given to his ideas.

A statement in the following terms, signed by Mr. Mboya and Mr. Ngala, was distributed to Press representatives:

"We have met Members of Parliament of all parties and addressed several meetings. We have also had three meetings with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, one of which was attended by the Governor of Kenya. We are satisfied that we have fully explained the African case for increased representation and fully interpreted the African attitude in the present constitutional crisis.

Visit Worth While

"We are also satisfied and convinced that this visit was both necessary and justified, and that on the whole it was worth while. In general, everyone we have met is in agreement with us that a case exists for increased African representation, and many M.P.s. and other people agree with us that a declaration of the ultimate objective of British policy in Kenya should be made immediately."

"Our talks with the Secretary of State for the Colonies were friendly and encouraging, and we are glad that he has decided to pay a visit to Kenya and to be able to participate and help in the discussions on the Constitution. This is a step in the right direction, and we shall look forward to his visit, hoping that, in the light of our discussions, every effort shall be spared to see a solution. We have fully emphasized the urgency of the situation, and we are convinced that this point is acknowledged."

"With regard to the present crisis, the following statements made in the last few days are worth noting. Mr. Shirley Cooke, European Member of the Kenya Legislative Council for the Coast, has recently resigned from the European Elected Members' organization and condemned the European Members' statement issued on July 5, but has been reported to have called the organization 'the mischievous and reactionary European Members' organization'. He said that 'a reactionary caucus controlled the organization, which was full of intrigue and political maneuvering, but objected to other races behaving in the same way.' Mr. Cooke at a meeting in Mombasa called for an immediate increase of seven African Members."

Liberal In Our Own Time

"Mr. Humphrey Slade, another European Elected Member for the Mai constituency, speaking in Gilgil a few days ago, referring to the African demand for increased representation and refusal to participate in the Council of Ministers under the Lyttelton constitution, said: 'We see no reason to be stampeded by any so-called demand. Liberalism is too often misunderstood for defeatism, and, not being defeatist, we (Europeans) prefer to be liberal in our own time.'

Referring further to the possibility of constitutional discussions, Mr. Slade said: 'So far as I am concerned, we shall not finally agree to any constitutional changes (other than those already agreed) without first telling you (the European electorate) and being assured of your majority.'

"These statements reveal beyond doubt that the stumbling-block in the Kenya situation is the European community. So far it is evident that they are neither united nor of the same opinion. It is also evident that whatever liberal talk European leaders may engage in in London is negative and ineffective so long as they intend to act in the manner suggested in Mr. Slade's statement.

"There can be no question, therefore, of the readiness of the African Elected Members for the present situation. The African Members' readiness to discuss has been repeated and emphasized. The European Members want to lay down conditions even before the discussions have started. This is very certainly unacceptable to the other parties. The Lyttelton Constitution included an escape clause which in the present circumstances, and in the European's best in their current attitude and confusion, the Secretary of State should also be called upon to invoke. The African case is supported by the Asian and the Asian groups.

White Highlands An Achievement

The White Highlands. — A few weeks ago Mr. Blundell stated in the Legislature that in a decade there may be Africans fit to farm 20, 30, or 40 acre plots in the White Highlands. This has been interpreted as a sign of a change in African and European liberal opinion among the Europeans. Let there be no illusion that the White Highlands remains the bone of contention in Kenya politics. This antagonism must be removed without compromise and immediate action.

Mr. Blundell's statement is curious and illogical since he, Minister for Agriculture, has been known publicly to praise African farmers in other parts of Kenya for their efficient and effective farming on larger plots than suggests for them a decade hence. To the best of our knowledge, there is no requirement for any European settler coming to Kenya to produce either a certificate of qualification or of past experience in farming. It is disconcerting that the Kenya Government is still engaging in recruiting white settlers in this regard.

State of Emergency. — The conditions which justified the declaration of the state of emergency, namely to combat Mau Mau terrorism, do not any longer exist. There is the danger that the conditions of the state of emergency may lead to the exploitation of emergency regulations in an otherwise normal situation. A declaration prolonging the state of emergency should be made forthwith. There is an urgent need to review the situation as regards rules, regulations for the Kikuyu, Embu, and other tribesmen. It is urgent that a review of the position of all people in detention camps and under restriction orders should be made immediately.

Public Meetings. — Government restrictions in Kenya limit freedom of association and freedom of assembly by denying Africans the right to organize on a Colony-wide basis and also to address open-air meetings. The African Elected Members demand that these restrictions be lifted. The requirement to take a tape recording of African leaders' speeches is also abhorred, especially when a copy of such tape recordings is left with the speaker and his organization to give as to what was said at such meetings. These restrictions are discriminatory, since they apply only to African leaders and organizations.

Capital and Skill from Outside Kenya

Need for Capital. — The African Elected Members are conscious of the need for the economic and social development of Kenya and of the fact that there are limitations as to the capital resources available to the country. The African Members are aware that the speedy development of Kenya is dependent on outside capital and on imported knowledge and skill. They do not, however, support the continuation of discriminatory European settler immigration. Increased African representation in the Legislative Council is part and parcel of their desire to see greater economic and social development among the African people, since it is only with antecipation, say, in the affairs of the country that the Africans can participate fully and effectively in the formulation of policies and programmes and the implementation of same.

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association's Kenya Report

Powerful and Disruptive Influence of Racial Extremists*

THE LYTTELTON PLAN, which amended the Constitution so as to include European, Asian, and African Ministers from the non-official side (in the proportion 32:1) has now been accepted as an interim working arrangement by all groups and is functioning satisfactorily. Since the Lyttelton Plan came into being in April, 1954, 21 figures in the Legislative Council have been 33 on the Government side and 19 on the non-official (opposition) side.

Last November (1954) it was agreed to increase the non-official side by two African Members and two other nominated Members and that the Government should be increased by a further two Ministers, one European and one African. The position will thus be 33 on the Government side and 21 on the non-official side. It is hoped to correct the disparity between these numbers by arranging for extra seats on the non-official side, including one for an additional Arab member.

Improved Relations Between All Races

It was heartening to encounter the improved relations which exist in Kenya between all races, particularly at the end of an Emergency which might have been expected to result in bitterness and explosive racialism. Instead we found that progressive thought and energy are being displayed in tackling the difficulties of the country, whether economic, social, or political. In spite of the barriers of race, culture, religion, and education, the moderate elements from each community work well together and understand each other's point of view.

This general impression was strongly reinforced in private conversations. We formed the opinion that men of good will in all races are more anxious to work together towards a common ideal to secure the highest development of the country, than they fail able to express publicly. This is probably due to the fact that in the political arena there is little or no common ground on which those whose interests transcend racial barriers can base themselves.

One reason why such men express themselves as citizens of Kenya first rather than as representatives of a particular race when discussing matters in private, yet find difficulty in carrying their ideas into the public forum, is perhaps the constraint of the racial or communal franchise.

Certainly this may be regarded as one reason for the accentuation of the difficulties, which are in any case serious, in progressing beyond the communal approach to common problems and interests. At the same time the negative and reactionary influence exerted by racial extremists on the political scene, even though they are relatively few in number, is powerful and disruptive.

One of the fears which underlies the reluctance of minorities to approach this question via an open mind is that a rapid transition might be undertaken on the basis of "one man, one vote" thus eliminating the influence of the minority groups at a stroke, and creating insecurity and instability at a time when security and stability are the twin foundations of development and progress, not least for the African people.

Warning About Communal Representation

There is, however, a great difference between adopting a universal franchise in a country which is immature and undeveloped and the rigid maintenance of the racial or communal franchise which helps to intensify racial political antagonisms. We do not believe that the present system is in the best interests of the minority communities, but numbered as they are by something like 100 to one, or indeed to the country as a whole.

It is because we have been so impressed by the capacity of the moderate people in each community to work together that we feel as friends of the people of Kenya, we can do no less than emphasize the dangers of gathering for too long to a purely communal structure of representation.

We suggest to the leaders of each community that the intention to create additional seats in the Legislative Council offers the opportunity for a fresh examination of these problems; this should, in our view, be regarded as a matter of urgency. It may be that upon reflection and discussion they could agree upon such an examination, with the object in suggesting a scheme which, avoiding the Scylla of a general colour bar, and the Charybdis of the existing communal rolls, would easily introduce together the moderate elements of all races in Kenya.

The examination, if it "should suggest the fear of the minorities of exclusion from political influence and the fear of the whites that it might be used as a device to hold him back," could prove useful in suggesting a basic principle of equality and protection which may create a superstructure of 250 common roll seats in the Legislative Council. If successful such an experiment would provide a political outlet and common ground for some of the best elements in Kenya on a non-racial basis. This in itself would be an invaluable contribution to the security, stability, and future progress of the country, and we sincerely hope that our suggestion will merit and receive the serious consideration of our friends in Kenya.

African United Apathy

During our visit there was already considerable African political activity in preparation for the African elections to be held in March, the first to be held in Kenya. Whatever the shortcomings of the first electoral rolls, we have no doubt that the experience gained will lead to amendment and improvement between this election and the general election to be held in 1960. It is an efficient procedure in the future rather than to argue, about the present, that no belief or attention should be directed.

Nevertheless, we were disappointed to discover that registration rates fall directly on the local or London market.

At the same time, which had been agreed at the conference, we now have a second, and more important, factor which must affect the outcome of the elections. One is the influence of the religious organizations.

Another is of course the ballot test, which has not yet been introduced, but which will have to appear before the next election, particularly as otherwise the law will discriminate in social importance completely from the law of the land. In the meantime the joys of the ballot box are something other than an electoral process.

Inadequate education, however, further adds to the difficulties, as appears to have happened in Kenya. It also seems likely that the introduction of the ballot test will be followed by the introduction of the franchise. These changes, and the nature of the franchise, will bring a framework of conditions favourable upon the principles of similar institutions in Britain. They are the first steps for national self-government. We have seen much more advanced forms of self-government developed in the Commonwealth. By the end of his term of office, the Governor of Kenya will be a member of the Kenyan Parliament.

E.K. Financial contribution to Commonwealth Development*

"Something of Which Country Can Be Proud," Says White Paper

THE UNITED KINGDOM'S CONTRIBUTION to development in the sterling Commonwealth has been about £50m. a year, of which some £125m. has been in the form of private investment and loans from U.K. individuals and something under £30m. in the form of grants from the same source. In addition, investment in Canada has averaged over £3m. a year.

The figures for the sterling Commonwealth are not, of course, the sum of the totals of U.K. private investment and loans and grants from public funds given in the previous paragraphs. The figures of private investment are balance of payments estimates and inevitably subject to a margin of error, whereas the figures for public funds are of disbursements over financial years.

As some measure of the U.K. effort it is possible to reach an approximate total from these figures of average investment in the whole Commonwealth over the years 1953-56 plus the special allowances to various Colonial territories referred to earlier. This total is nearly £200m. a year.

11% of Gross National Product

Set against the average of our gross national product in that period this represents some 11%. Put another way, it represents between 7% and 8% of our gross fixed investment at home.

It has been unofficially estimated that in the 10 years 1946-55, 70% of the external capital invested in the sterling Commonwealth came from the U.K., by contrast with 45% from the United States, 10% from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and 5% from other sources.

The Government will be prepared to make appropriate arrangements for technical assistance to newly-independent countries to the extent that they are not covered by any existing schemes or by broadly equivalent arrangements planned before independence. The U.K. Government hopes that other Commonwealth

Governments will make their own resources will make their own arrangements for technical assistance with newly-independent countries in the Commonwealth.

The provision of administrative staff is an integral and continuing part of the functions of the Colonial Office, which is responsible for helping and guiding the Colonies in all aspects of their development — political, economic and social. The most important of these functions is the provision of permanent staff of all kinds, including members of H.M. Overseas Civil Service and contract staff on contract.

In addition to the normal functions of the administrative staff, which include a great deal of scientific and technical assistance and particularly in financial and economic matters, the Colonial Office has a large number of permanent staff on its staff dealing with such subjects as tropical diseases (including animal health, fisheries, forestry, agriculture, etc.), education, health, labour, social welfare, co-operative societies, housing, and engineering. The advisory staff provide expert guidance on the formulation and execution of policy in their respective fields.

The Colonial Office has a large number of advisory bodies. Two of these occupy a somewhat special position, namely the Inter-University Council for Higher Education Overseas and the Council for Overseas Colleges of Arts, Science and Technology, in that they are concerned with autonomous institutions of higher education in the Colonial territories and operate with a large measure of independence from the Colonial Office. Their services will still be available to the institutions with which they are respectively concerned after the territories in which those institutions are situated become independent.

Colonial Students

Among the valuable non-Governmental services which the U.K. provides, often through the Colonial Office or the representatives in London of Colonial Governments, is the placing of students in universities, technical colleges and other training centres in this country. The authorities concerned have shown their realization of the importance of this matter by making available an ever-increasing number of places for Colonial students.

The number of students in the U.K. doubled between 1947 and 1956 and is now about 12,000. The two largest groups are nursing (over 3,000) and engineering students (1,295). These services represent a great contribution to the development of the Colonial territories.

Continued services of this kind, arranged by the Colonial Office, will be required for many years to come in the needs of dependent territories. The U.K. Government will make available, if they so desire, to new independent countries advisory services of the sort which they have received in the past. In providing such assistance the U.K. Government has drawn upon a wide variety of experience from its departments, nationalized corporations, scientific and professional institutions, and private enterprise.

Atomic energy will play an increasingly important part in the economic development of the Commonwealth, and in this field the U.K. is better qualified than any other country to give assistance. A number of Commonwealth countries are already obtaining atomic and technical aid from the U.K. under bilateral arrangements in accordance with their own needs and varying stages of development. In this way these facilities are available within the framework of the Commonwealth Economic Conference, which can supply the most important assistance from the Commonwealth countries.

Nuclear Power

In Central and East Africa the Atomic Energy Authority has set up offices to direct its activities to Britain and other atomic energy interests. Geologists from the Ministry and from the U.K. Geological Survey have also visited several other Commonwealth and Colonial territories to survey possible deposits of uranium, and scientific equipment has been sent, as to isotopes needed for medical, agricultural, and industrial purposes have been supplied to Commonwealth and Colonial territories requiring them. Doctors and research workers from Colonial territories have attended courses at the authority's Isotope School and Colonial Governments are all kept informed of the trend of developments in the field of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

Atomic energy can find a practical application at an early stage in most Commonwealth countries through the use of radioactive isotopes, for which the necessary skills can be acquired fairly quickly, and little heavy expenditure on installations or equipment is needed. Radio isotopes have widespread application in the treatment and diagnosis of disease (where they supplement or supplant X-rays), in industry, and in the improvement of agriculture through new research techniques and in other ways.

The immediate need for nuclear power as an economic alternative to coal, oil, or hydro-electric power in most Commonwealth countries is however limited. At present, because of the high capital cost of installation, nuclear power is competitive only in industrial and urban areas. Reactor designs for small-scale electrical power generation have not yet been fully tested under commercial conditions, but work is proceeding on certain systems which offer prospects of commercial application where the costs of conventional power are relatively high.

H.M. Government will, as part of its contribution in the field of technical assistance, give all possible assistance to other Commonwealth countries, including the Colonial territories, in developing atomic energy to meet their individual requirements.

No Commonwealth Development Agency

Proposals were made in the House of Commons on November 30, 1956, that there might be a Commonwealth Development Agency and Bank, each representative of all independent Commonwealth countries. These ideas have been considered carefully by H.M. Government and other independent Commonwealth Governments. In general, all the Governments, while recognizing the need for more capital for development, and while sympathetic to the motives which have inspired these suggestions, are doubtful of their practical value.

Since the U.K. is the only Commonwealth country which is a net long-term investor abroad, a Commonwealth Bank could do nothing to increase the total availability of capital for investment. A Commonwealth Development Agency which would lay down priorities for the Commonwealth as a whole would present insuperable difficulties for many Commonwealth Governments of both a political and practical nature. The allocation of priorities in this way does not appear to be feasible.

Machinery has been in existence for many years for the purpose of exchanging information and discussing policies on economic matters. Apart from the normal channels for correspondence between Governments, operating through High Commissioners, there are regular meetings on economic matters held in London attended by officials from Commonwealth High Commissioners' staffs. These discussions are supplemented by frequent visits between independent other Commonwealth capitals by both Ministers and officials and close contact among Commonwealth delegations at meetings of international economic organizations.

It has also become customary for Commonwealth Finance Ministers to take advantage of the annual meetings of the International Bank and of the International Monetary Fund to meet together informally for general discussion. At the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers it was said at the suggestion of the then Minister of Economic Affairs that the meeting in September, 1957, should be held in Nairobi. This will give a further opportunity for discussion of economics in operation among Commonwealth countries. The Commonwealth Economic Committee, whose office is in London, was established in 1925 and consists of senior Commonwealth representatives. Its main aims are to provide common services, such as effective Commonwealth representation, consumption and trade, as well as to keep up on economic questions which member governments refer to it. It is a valuable organization for the exchange and dissemination of economic information useful to Commonwealth countries. The future of this Committee was considered at the meeting of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers, and it was decided that the committee should be given a wider remit, particularly in connection with expansion of the functions of the Bank of International Settlements.

The United Kingdom's contribution to Commonwealth development is something of which we may be proud. We intend that it shall continue, based on well-tried principles and methods of development which have been found effective in the past. Such methods

We place particular emphasis upon the provision of technical aid. This form of help is particularly important today when scientific and industrial ideas are developed so quickly. In this field H.M. Government is determined to do everything possible to meet the increasing requirements of the expanding Commonwealth.

The problems which the Commonwealth Governments are facing in financing their respective development programmes were frankly recognized in the final communiqué of the Prime Ministers' Conference, 1957.

In their general review of economic questions, the Commonwealth Ministers gave special attention to the impact of the major programmes of development on which many of their countries are now engaged. These programmes call for high levels of domestic saving which can only be secured by sound internal policy. But they also call for conditions favourable to investment from other countries.

The U.K. will continue to play its leading rôle in furthering economic development in the countries of the Commonwealth, and important contributions are also being made by other Commonwealth members. But in view of the continued need for capital investment, it is also important to encourage investment from other sources on suitable conditions.

Acute Capital Shortage

The present is a period of acute capital shortage in almost every country. This will call for policies designed to make investment in the Commonwealth from outside as attractive as possible.

Whatever funds may be forthcoming from outside, nothing can provide an effective substitute for the efforts of Commonwealth countries themselves, and if the U.K. is to play a leading part in this field it must shape its policies accordingly. This means that as a country and as individuals we must save more.

We must modernize our industry and extend our resources of power. We must produce more at prices which are competitive. We must sell more abroad. We must be unremitting in our determination to create a suitable economic climate which will not only enable the U.K. to undertake its share in Commonwealth development but will also attract support from elsewhere. All this will not be achieved easily or in a short period of time, but upon our ultimate success largely depends our own future and that of the Commonwealth as a major force in world affairs.

A critical leading article on the "White Paper" appeared in last week's issue. — END

Britain and the Commonwealth

Britain's Claim to Full Membership

A SOCIETY OF ADULT BRITISH NATIONS in a Commonwealth was one of the greatest value to the security of the West, but was also of immense practical value to its member countries, said Sir Roy Welensky, in a recent address to the British Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Britain's avowed aim was to help her colonies until they became full members of the Commonwealth, he continued, and the aim was "the final evolution of the Commonwealth to be a balanced development of politics and economics or the existence of political emancipation without the accomplishment of economic maturity."

"This is of the utmost importance to us because the very basis of our claim to full independence and full membership of the Commonwealth is that we insist that progress in politics must go hand in hand with progress in the economic and social fields. When an independent nation is going to be presented with the utmost vigour — and as early as possible — by the Federation, it is the very thing which has gone to make the Commonwealth great, and which no man must be prepared to sacrifice in the Commonwealth structure if that structure itself is not to disintegrate."

High Standards

"First there is the high standard of justice and of administration which Britain set in her Empire from the earliest days under which corruption and graft were outlawed. Secondly, there is the wisdom which Britain has shown in maintaining an elasticity of thought towards the affairs of the several Dominions and Colonies, particularly in regard to the path which the development of each takes and to the pace at which it goes. Thirdly, there has been an insistence on efficiency not only in commerce and industry, but in administration, which on the whole has been achieved, and which certainly compares with any other country outside the Iron Curtain. The last of these factors is perhaps the most difficult to define, but it can be summed up by a reference to the high standards which Britain sets in the home to the value attached to truth, to the insistence on the value of schooling and training, to probity in political life, and to that much-valued phrase 'fair play,' which I confess, I like."

"Now let me behalf of the Federation to these standards and principles. They were brought to this country when civilization started here. They are established here, and they are to be preserved here, and it is the duty of the civilized population to see that they are carried into the lives of the more backward sections of the community, to become established there. We must not let them go by the board, and we will in no circumstances let them be lowered for the sake of political expediency, or in response to the pressure of the extremists. That much is at stake here — and, for that matter, too much is at stake in the future development of the Commonwealth. What happens to the Federation in the coming years, the way events shape in this part of Africa, will have an important influence not only on other African countries but also on almost every Commonwealth country where the problems of multi-racialism are encountered."

"The franchise is the test of whether civilization is to remain in the Federation, just as it is the test of our good faith towards millions of African people in our country whose advancement has just started. Therefore we must make sure, as I believe the Federal Government has done, that the law which will give the vote to the people of the country is both firm in its determination to ensure high standards and also generous in its opportunity for all to reach the standards set."

Euroafrican Leader Joins Federal Party

Mrs. H. ASCROFT, president and chairman of the Euroafrican Federation of Central Africa and president of the Euroafrican Association of Nyasaland, has decided to join the Nyasaland Federal Party and hopes to stand in next year's Federal elections. Euroafricans, Asians, and Coloureds are, he believes, not directly represented in Parliament, and it is these communities in particular that he wishes to represent. A multi-racial Federation could be achieved by "instinct," without the aid of the Inter-Racial Association or that of the Capricorn Society. Mrs. Ascroft is a farmer.

In the Dominion Party Wins Elections

Franchise Registration to be Reopened

MR. WINSTON FIELD, M.P., was re-elected Federal president of the Dominion Party at its annual congress in Bulawayo. The vice-president, Mr. Freer Payne of Lusaka, was also re-elected, defeating the Northern Rhodesian leader of the party, Mr. John Gaunt, M.L.C., also of Lusaka.

Over 50 resolutions, many dealing with major political issues, were discussed. The question of constitutionalisation was, at Mr. Payne's suggestion, referred to a study group. The principle of a business committee was accepted. Five contentious proposals, mainly on party affairs and African affairs, were voted down. The text of one resolution reads: "That this congress demands that the Dominion Party, when returned as a Government, shall refuse any legislative legislation passed by any territorial legislature in the Federation which has not been approved by the electorate and which is in conflict with the party's principles and policies."

Mr. Field warned delegates that the next government of the Federation would probably be faced with a divided constituency and that it would be impossible to make promises, as it might be impossible to fulfil them.

First Rate

THE BANK OF RHODESIA AND NYASALAND published its bank rate for the first time on August 11. This is the rate (currently 41%) at which the bank will rediscount commercial bills on behalf of the banks of accepting houses. The bank will also discount treasury and statutory commission bills. The bank has moved into new premises in one of Salisbury's multi-storey buildings.

Letter to the Editor

Capricorn Society and Political Parties

Views of the Editor

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA:

Sir.—Your editorial comment on the participation by members of the Capricorn Africa Society in the formation of new political parties in Kenya and the Federation will not I think be regarded by members of the society as yet another effort to tempt the society to sacrifice its principles for the sake of immediate political tactics.

The Capricorn movement to make common cause with the European political leaders in Kenya and the Federal Parliament would mean much more than merely to reap a few detailed recommendations such as the qualifications for the vote in the appendix to the society's contract. It would mean rejecting one of the basic objectives to which the society is irrevocably committed—the common voters' roll.

It is, I am sure, certainly not the intention of the society to create splits in the so-called "liberal front", but it would assuredly please some of its supporters through compromising its principles than it ever would through the participation of a number of its members in the formation of these new political parties.

Yours faithfully,

Goodwood,
Chichester.

MARCH,

The paragraph in a recent leading article to which the Earl of March refers contained no suggestion that anyone should sacrifice principles to political tactics, and is as follows:

"...to the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA, as all racial readers will know, for we have repeatedly criticized the failure of Government parties, and individuals, to stand by the principles they had professed."

Our correspondent's second paragraph implies that political leaders in Kenya and the Federation are almost all of one mind, and that the general policy for which they stand is incompatible with the ideas of the Capricorn Africa Society. In fact, opinions vary enormously in the territories on racial issues. Our suggestion was that whereas the forces of liberalism need to be strengthened, they may be dangerously weakened by what is planned by adherents of the society. We did not propose that the Capricornists who wish to take part in politics life should refrain from that step, but that they should "make common cause with the leaders who are now already striving for better relations between the races", adding: "to lose sight of that essential factor or give it less consideration than the society's own ideas of a multiple franchise based on qualifications which have not commended themselves either to the Federal Government or the Southern Rhodesian Government" would be tragic.

The society's dilemma springs from the fact that it committed itself—in our opinion at the time prematurely—and imprudently—to a particular form of multiple franchise before the inquiry which the Government of Southern Rhodesia was known to be contemplating had been undertaken, and when it was also known that the Federal Government was engaged in examining the same crucial question. The society was, for obvious reasons, urged by well-meaning not to publish its own ideas until the report of the Treagold Commission became available. It insisted that advice issued its plan in detail, and later followed up its request to the Treagold Commission for reasons which are now well known.

A further misfortune was that the two Governments could not accept the qualifications for a franchise on which the Government of Southern Rhodesia agreed, and which differed little from those recommended by the Treagold Commission. Federal and territorial Ministers were of course sincere in the views to which they have given expression, and as the plan of neither the Assembly nor that of the Capricorn Society, "as copied", has claimed no right of being accepted federally or territorially.

Readers who have not followed the discussions about the franchise might be misled by one sentence in the above letter into the assumption that the society alone stands for a common voters' roll. That is not the case. Indeed, a few Europeans in both East and Central Africa were advocating an inter-racial electoral roll before the society was founded, and gradual evolution towards a non-racial roll (admittedly with qualifications) by the Capricorn Society wisely stands for a qualified roll) is implicit in the Federal and Southern Rhodesian schemes.

It may not be the intention to split the liberal front, but that would be the inevitable result of the formation of new parties by members of the Capricorn Society. Many members, because they recognize the danger, strongly oppose the idea of the new parties, and we have been told by office-bearers of the society in Africa that they have given notice that they will resign from the society if the step now contemplated is taken.

Scholarships

Editorial

TWO SCHOLARSHIPS have recently been offered to students in Tanganyika. The first, by the archdiocese of Dublin, is restricted to Roman Catholic Africans, is worth £300 a year, and is tenable at University College, Dublin. The second, offered by Arthur Guinness, Sons & Co., also to Africans, has a value of £100 a year for four years, and is tenable at Trinity College, Dublin. The Government of Tanganyika has received £10,000 from the Yusuf Dadoo Charitable Trust, and the income is to be used to provide bursaries in scientific subjects for students from Tanganyika, preference being given to Africans.

Direct Elections in Uganda

A UNIMMOS' support was given in the Legislative Council of Uganda last week to a motion asking H.M. Government to introduce direct elections next year for the 12 African Representative members' seats in the Senate, which by law also 12 nominated African members, together making the House of 60. The Administrative Secretary said that under the qualifications proposed for this in four adult African males and one adult African woman in five would become eligible to vote. The Government's aim is to introduce a common electoral roll in 1960 or 1961.

Duty of Leadership in Kenya

Mr. Slade on the Non-Racial Approach

MR. HUMPHREY SLADE, Elected Member of the Legislative Council of Kenya for the Aberdare constituency, said when recently speaking in Gilgit:

"Kenya has been developed, and must continue to be developed, on the condition of loyalty to British Commonwealth and to British traditions, standards and ideals. No country can develop security or prosperity without common standards. Hence, African and European must live in one of our countries, the best of our civilization."

This means that we European settlers of Kenya, the white Africans, carry a tremendous responsibility, all the greater because we are comparatively few. We are the leaders and teachers of other races. We have taken that responsibility upon ourselves in East Africa over the last 100 years, though it is only in the last 50 years that our efforts have been anything more than that of a handful of brave missionaries, explorers, administrators, and pioneer settlers. Looking back on what other races have gained in these years in security, health, prosperity, and cultural development, we have no reason to be ashamed.

"Now we face the real challenge. Some of those whom we have taught and led are growing up; and, if we are to justify a continuing claim to be leaders and teachers, we must adapt ourselves to change. Those of us who cannot do this process of adaptation will no longer be teachers or leaders in Kenya; but those who can, must and will stay, and will carry on and lead."

Leadership Not Domination

"In the interests of all the people of this Colony, we cannot abandon that responsibility; and we require other races here to accept the fact that we must for the foreseeable future continue to be their teachers and leaders. That, of course, differs from domination by Europeans just as much as it is from domination by the natives."

"The acceptance of non-racialism, by constitution and otherwise, it must continue to be justified by performance. For that there is only one way, the non-racial approach, by which a mean impartial help, encouragement, and recognition of every individual according to his personal merit and regardless of race."

"The non-racial approach, if honestly and sincerely applied, is inevitably a slow approach. Just as it demands responsibility on the part of Europeans so it demands patience on the part of other races — long patience."

"At the present stage of development in Kenya, it is of vital importance to all races that we preserve the purity of a nucleus of British standards and ideals, and of no less importance that we preserve a sense of security for other races and the best of their tribal traditions and ideals."

"We have many individuals of other races who, by character and education, have outrun the masses. These are the leaders and teachers, or potential leaders and teachers, of their own races. They must be judged by merit and ability alone, each according to his own deserts."

"The non-racial approach demands, on the one side, that individuals of other races must be judged by our own standards, without allowance for race (as exemplified recently by an African singer being struck off the rolls of advocates); but, on the other side, that we must encourage, help, and recognize those who truly measure up to our standards."

"That is my creed. It depends mainly upon the quality of the Europeans of Kenya as leaders and teachers. I have the utmost faith in them — not lessened by their performance during the past five years of rebellion and Satanism. Yet this creed will be worth no more than a tinker's curse unless it be upheld by a great majority of Europeans with complete sincerity."

Kenya Church Association

THE KENYA CHURCH ASSOCIATION in the United Kingdom has sent £230 to the building fund for Lentwood Methodist Church, and in order to raise further funds a sale is to be held in London on Wednesday, November 12. Gifts should be sent to Miss A. Brooke Anderson, 225 Farley Road, South Croydon, Surrey.

Governor's Warning to Africans

Notes of Good Opportunities

SIR FREDERICK CRAWFORD, Governor of Uganda, said when he was installed as visitor to Makerere College:

"It is of the utmost importance that more and more qualified Africans should enter Government service to ensure that when Uganda attains self-government it has a Civil Service predominantly staffed by local men who have gained their initial experience in co-operation and collaboration with their British colleagues."

"There is a constant cry in Uganda to Africans in the Civil Service, but how are we to find this is only a handful of those who have the benefits of higher education at this school having entered Government service?"

"We are in this position in all our countries. Country improves our agricultural products, and if improved, if at this university college where there is a fine Faculty of Agriculture, only two Uganda students entered the agriculture course, we would like to see this year?"

Notes of Bad Opportunities

ACCORDING TO THE KENYA HANSARD, Mr. Mangat, G.S.C., said in the Legislative Council, Nairobi City Council is a veritable jungle and requires a very stout rope to pull it. And here the Government is introducing so many rogues in the cordage that it will not stand the strain."

"The hand is older than the mind, and the use of the hand can very often bring the brain into its own." — The Earl of Portchapel addressing the Kenya Legislature.

Two Views of Racism in Tanganyika

The Federation of Labour

MR. JAMES K. TWINING, president of the Daily Times, Dar es Salaam:

"Despite all the talk of equality of Mr. Julius Nyerere, president of the Tanganyika African National Union, I can find no other word than 'racialism' to describe the status of that body. Other groups and other nations may see the enormous importance of a majority in relation to the economic future of Tanganyika. In rank and file of T.A.N.U. see privilege and power, the official car and the residence with the Governor, and kept out of their ranks. They are impatient about it. They insist on the slogan 'Africa for the Africans'. Mr. Nyerere, a slim, loquacious, Volksdeutchen figure, carrying a handle walking stick, has a large following in Dar es Salaam."

"Educated classes are still scarce in Tanganyika. The European and the Tanzanian Federation of Labour are the only organisations of the 'top' Africans which are well educated. They may not be fully qualified as Government officials."

"In view of the twin movement of labour and nationalisation, the Federation of Labour has been big-brothered by three world bodies—the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the I.L.D., and the American Federation of Labour".

JUNE M. DUNCAN of Tanga, however, sees the situation differently. In a letter to The Times last Friday she wrote:

"To-night lorry-loads of Africans passed my window singing and cheering, carrying banners with the name of Mr. Julius K. Nyerere, President of the Tanganyika African National Union, and Sir Edward Twining, Governor of Tanganyika. These people are celebrating the lifting of a ban imposed in February on Mr. Nyerere's addressing public meetings and his nomination as representative African member for Dar es Salaam in the Legislative Council.

"Tanganyika has lately been an uncomfortable place for liberal-minded people; and these will thank the Government for an action which has at one stroke removed a great deal of racial tension and mistrust. But I hope that in their attitude they will not overlook that most of the credit for Tanganyika's continued peacefulness and freedom from riots, and the remarkable degree of co-operation between Europeans, Asians and Africans that has been maintained, should go to Mr. Nyerere and his followers."

The behaviour of these people, many ill-educated and extremely poor, in face of treatment perhaps unnecessarily repressive, has been dignified and restrained; and augurs well for the stability of this nascent African democracy, on which the future of Central and East Africa may well turn. Tanganyika Asians and Europeans can live up to these high standards of discipline; Tanganyika may well become the happiest country in Africa, where racial tensions do not exist".

Need for Middle Class Africans

MR. HENRY OPPENHEIMER, Member of the South African Parliament and a director of some of the leading mining companies in the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, said when he addressed the Witwatersrand Council of the United Party of South Africa last week that the colour policy of the Nationalist Party was a policy of despair, a policy of refusing to face facts. Stability could come only by adapting institutions to necessary changes and by creating safe respecting African middle class, which would be the best guarantee against lawlessness and Communist agitation. The fear of white workers that masses of uneducated peasants would take over their work at infinitely lower wages was understandable, and the policy must be to raise and guarantee the standards of the whites while permitting and encouraging Africans to develop a rôle alike in the community.

Coffee Industry in Uganda

Terms of Reference of Commission

MR. FREDERICK N. BUTCHER, Q.C., has been appointed chairman of a commission of inquiry into the coffee price structure in Uganda, with the following terms of reference: "To inquire into and review within the existing framework of the controlled coffee industry and the legislation relating thereto."

A.—The present formulae for coffee will be reviewed prior to being laid by the Coffee Industry Board to licensed curing works and licensed hulleries for fixing and to make recommendations regarding: (a) whether there should be any change in the formula, and, if so, what change; (b) the details of the items of cost which should be included in any price formula; and (c) the manner in which scope for which shall be contained in a price formula should be varied as necessary in fixing coffee processing costs.

B.—The present quality incentive scheme operated by the Coffee Industry Board, and to make recommendations as to any way by which it could be improved.

C.—The method of purchase of processed coffee by the Coffee Industry Board, and to recommend whether any changes should be made in the form of contract entered into by the board with licensed curing works and licensed general hulleries for the purchase of such coffee for them;

D.—The manner in which the Coffee Industry Board sells processed coffee, and to recommend whether any change in the system of selling should be made".

The commission began its sittings in Kampala last Thursday.

The other members of the commission are Mr. Edward R. Greene, late Director of Coffee, Ministry of Food, Mr. S. M. Duncan, G.A., and Mr. T. M. Boothroyd (Secretary).

It has been agreed in principle that an African should be elected to the aldermanic bench of Nairobi.

American Investment in the Federation

Conditions Favourable, Says Adviser

CONDITIONS IN THE FEDERATION are of great economic basic favourability to extensive commercial and industrial development, states Mr. G. F. Spaulding, the American business adviser, in his final report to the Federal Government. His assignment was to interest companies, particularly American concerns, in certain industrial projects in the Federation.

Mr. Spaulding believes that in areas in which output and quality of work can be readily tested, there will soon be approximately equal pay for Africans and Europeans for equal work.

He considers that an industrial development corporation or investment trust could help finance small businesses that never, small industries can be started when more iron and steel is produced at the Quie; and that there is a conspicuous opening for a sizeable and integrated textile manufacturing business. To attract more American private capital to the industrial field would be difficult, however, until the Federation can provide a market able to absorb the output of a plant somewhere near the "optimum". Another factor tending to impede the flow of American capital is lack of information, few Americans having any knowledge of recent growth, present economic strength, and the future possibilities of industrial and commercial development. This situation could be remedied by the Federation's representatives now stationed in Washington.

Fear of Racial Trouble

Fear of eventual racial troubles must be some impediment to investment, but he has not yet encountered that obstacle so far as the Federation is concerned. It has been estimated that American private capital totaling £25m. had been invested in the Federation up to 1956, practically all in mining.

Industries which might attract American funds include a plant for ammonia and other chemicals, the operation of a telephone and telegraph system, a bank, plantation, chrome processing, fibre glass, food processing, plastics, fixed construction contracts, secondary iron and steel industries, shopping centres, and an integrated textile manufacturing business.

The report says if the directors of the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation of New York approves a legal representative of the company, who would probably be sent to the Federation to present and discuss a proposal to acquire and operate the telephone and telegraph system. Mr. Spaulding writes: "I had two meetings in New York with the vice-president in charge of operations and development, a result of which he agreed that the proposed official of the Federal Government write a letter to the president of the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation inviting him to send over a team to make a investigation". Following an exchange of letters with the Minister of Finance the mission was arranged and spent three weeks in the Federation in March. It recommended that the Government ask the company that a definite proposal be put forward and presented.

Nitrogen Plant Premature

United Chemical and Dye Corporation has rejected a proposal to invest in a nitrogen products manufacturing plant in the Federation. Three of its specialists visited the Federation and made a thorough examination of the present uses of nitrogenous products for fertilizers and explosives. They forecast a probable demand in 1960 of 22,000 tons. Costs figures were submitted and operations costs were shown at point were re-examined and it was decided that even a plant did not seem to be a feasible investment. Moreover, until the output could be considerably increased the cost of the product in their operation could not be reduced below the cost of importing them.

Mr. Spaulding describes the use of wattle and native pine for pulping as a "natural thought". The amount of white wood available after 1959 should be over 100,000 tons annually from 60,000 acres. Oszi has been tentatively selected as a logical site for a mill. If the forthcoming report of the chief engineer of Smit Viscosa, the Italian manufacturers of rayon and paper pulp, was favourable, the task of financing the project would begin, but that should not be difficult. Smit Viscosa was willing to accept a major participation.

Lord Hudson's Estate

VISCOUNT HUDSON, who died in February at the age of 70, left property in the United Kingdom of a net value of £57,721, including his 1,300-acre farm near Pewsey, Wiltshire. Soon after the end of the last war he, the Marquess of Salisbury, and Earl De La Warr became partners in the 50,000-acre Charter estate in Southern Rhodesia, and Lord Hudson also had property in Salisbury, which is estimated to be worth between £25,000 and £50,000. Federation's Commonwealth Exports

Betaine Due to Lower Copper Prices

THE FEDERATION'S EXPORTS to the Commonwealth in the first quarter of the year at £22,986,000 showed a fall of £4,468,000 on the corresponding figures for 1956. The drop was almost entirely due to lower copper prices, says the Central African Statistical Office.

Exports of merchandise for foreign markets rose from £11,725,000 in January-March last year to £14,880,000. Shipments to the United States and the German Federal Republic were over a third higher in this case. Sales to the Netherlands, largely copper and tobacco, expanded more than four-fold and there were heavier exports to Britain, mainly copper, asbestos, and tobacco. Smaller copper consignments were responsible for a substantial decline in trade with Italy, Sweden, France and Denmark.

Imports from South Africa during the quarter rose by over 10 per cent., and purchases from the U.K. dropped from £16,447,000 for April-June 1956 to £15,973,000, or 40.2%. The share of the Commonwealth fell from 82.2% to 81.3%, although total imports from such sources were over 10% higher at £32,267,000.

In foreign countries "machined" goods worth £1,433,000 (£6,655,000), the United States share being £748,000, largely in machinery, vehicles and chemicals. Shipments from Italy of machinery rose by nearly 50% to £384,000. Other countries showing increases included the German Federal Republic, Belgium, and Sweden.

There was a marked decline in Belgian Congo imports, due to smaller purchases of palm and palm kernel oil and animal foodstuffs.

Kenya Indian Advocate Suspended

MURSHID RAM GAUTAMA, a 40-year-old advocate in Mombasa, has been ordered by the High Court of Kenya not to practise for two years because of his professional misconduct. He was struck off the roll of advocates in 1942 but readmitted five years ago. The Acting Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Connell heard the case, which was submitted for the Advocates Committee by Mr. J. H. S. Todd. He said that Gautama had bargained with a client for a percentage of an increased award made by the Government for land which it had acquired compulsorily; that at the time of such bargaining, Gautama knew the higher figure which the Government was prepared to pay, but he did not pass on the information to his client for another five months, and that he told the client that several other people for whom he was acting in similar cases had all agreed to give him one-third of any higher sum which he could obtain for them. Gautama admitted the wrong-doing but pleaded in mercy on the ground of age.

Emergency Incidents

DURING JULY three Mau Mau terrorists surrendered and three were captured in Kenya. Six guns and 264 pounds of ammunition were recovered. The capture of a terrorist by a police patrol in the Embu area led to the surrender of his leader and the two remaining members of the gang to a prison warden at Kerugoya, near Embu. They stated that they were "fed up" with gangster life and did not want to remain at large. In the Nanyuki area four cows were killed by terrorists and two were slashed during the month.

Better yield,
larger profits from

Clean Cotton.

Defoliate with MEENO
The defoliant that retards second growth.

How do you pick? Mechanically? By hand? Either way, it will pay you to defoliate. Here is why:

You get whiter, cleaner fiber, free of leaf trash and chlorophyll stain.

2. You pick quicker, so you save money and increase profit.
3. You help prevent boll rot, and also control insect pests by depriving them of food and exposing them to the elements.

Now — with MEENO — you can defoliate with lasting effect. MEENO, approved by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, is the only defoliant on the market that attacks the leaves systemically and thus retards regrowth. A single treatment with MEENO lasts 3 to 5 weeks and there is no appreciable regrowth, should picking be delayed. What little regrowth may occur will come out white, so it does not stain the cotton. And it will appear chiefly on the main stalk, where it will not impede clean picking by hand or machines. Finally, by defoliating with MEENO, you can harvest earlier.

Add all these benefits together and you will find it will pay to defoliate with MEENO. It is your way—the best way—to reap the biggest money-making crop you have ever had.

The touch that makes the difference

The printed notes of the score are the same for every pianist, but a great pianist plays them with a difference.

Something like this can happen in electrical engineering. Equipment made to the same specification by different manufacturers is never identical. For a company builds its past experience into everything it makes. And the extent and quality of that experience can be seen in the durability and efficiency of its products. That is why even in these days of exact measurement and rigorous inspection, a reputation and a name with a long history are still such reliable guides to the quality of a product. Such a name is .

Diesels for East Africa

EAST AFRICAN RAILWAYS and HARBOURS have decided not to buy more steam locomotives. M. W. E. Bulman, assistant chief mechanical engineer, said in Nairobi on Monday that the decision was due to increasing difficulties about water and the haulage of heavier train loads at higher speeds over mountainous routes. The introduction of diesel locomotives would increase efficiency and economy and avoid capital expenditure on strengthening bridges to take heavier steam engines. He said on buying larger wagons the class Garratt steam engine, serving in East Africa, the most powerful and heaviest narrow gauge locomotives in the world, represented "a worthy finale to

London and Rhodesian Mining and Land

Shareholders Advised to Reject Offer

SIR JOSEPH BALL, chairman of London and Rhodesian Mining and Land Co., Ltd., has sent the following circular letter to the stockholders:

"We have received a circular letter from Glazer Brothers of Johannesburg containing a conditional offer to purchase 51% of the stock units in the capital of this company at £3s. 3d. per unit and an interim dividend of 1s. per unit, subject to our board's advice as to accepting the offer. You will understand reasons for giving this advice are as follows:

"(1) The directors' is the opinion that the value of the stock units in excess of £1,000 per unit offered for 51% only of the shares in the company, in view of close knowledge of the assets in question, supplied by calculations made on a conservative basis by the company's accountants, confirms them in the view that the value of the net assets to date, without allowing for future appreciation, is in excess of £1,000,000 minimum of £1,000 each for the stock units.

"(2) Your directors take the view that the potential profit-earning capacity of the company is such that increasing profits and dividends may be expected in the not too distant future. This situation is largely attributable to the fact that an intensive development programme of the company's ranches has already been approved and introduced; and it is the opinion of your directors as well as their technical advisers, that profits from this source are likely to increase from the present figure of some £60,000 per annum to a figure in excess of £200,000 by 1960. An annual ranching profit of this latter amount would alone increase the net earnings of the company before taxation to an annual rate of £270,000, as compared with £146,000 earned in the year to June 30, 1955.

"(3) As a result of the progressive policy adopted by your present board during recent years, it has been possible to increase the dividends from 5% during the 12 years preceding 1951 to 6% for the years 1951, 1952, and 1953, to 7% for 1954, and to 10% for each of the last two years.

"When the 1957 Finance Bill becomes law the board expect that it should be possible to live off certain of the company's activities with a view to obtaining the tax concessions applicable to overseas trade corporations.

"(4) In the circumstances detailed above, members will not be surprised to learn that neither their directors nor certain associated companies who have substantial holdings in your company have any intention of selling at the price of 1s. 3d. per stock unit which Glazer Brothers have offered conditionally. Indeed, the directors have been advised that certain of these associates are continuing their policy of buying the company's stock at current market prices.

"(5) The offer, made is conditional upon the receipt by Glazer Brothers of acceptances of not less than 2,040,000 stock units, i.e., the equivalent of 51% of the issued capital. Your directors nevertheless reserve the right to accept a smaller number of stock units. In the opinion of your directors it is by no means certain, therefore, that Glazer Brothers would necessarily elect to acquire your holding at the price stated, even if you accepted the conditional offer they have made.

"Your directors recommend you not to take any action whatever on the offer made by Glazer Brothers. With their bold type "London & Rhodesian Mining & Land Co., Ltd." the slogan was, of course, issued without the approval of the Board, and it is this document which you are particularly advised not to sign."

Price of Copper

ON THE LONDON MARKET copper went below £210 a ton last Thursday, the lowest price since the market was reopened four years ago. In March of last year it reached the full-time peak of £437. Expecting still further falls, some purchasers are buying sparingly. On Monday the Rhodesian Selection Trust group cut its basic price to U.K. consumers from £220 to £210 per ton. That day there was a further fall in the Metal Exchange quotation to a closing price of £208 12s. 6d.

Urwira Minerals

URWIRA MINERALS, LTD., report that 57,261 metric tons of ore were treated in the June quarter and 1,890 tons of concentrates produced, of which the metal content (based on mine weights and assays) was 41.47% lead, 11.49% copper, 10.19% silver, and 20.5 gms. per ton of gold. The estimated loss on working (before charging depreciation and interest on loans) was £16,634; after those deductions the estimated loss was £91,434.

Rosterman Gold

ROSTERMAN GOLD MINES, LTD., at an ex-ordinary general meeting in London on Monday unanimously approved the proposal to purchase the issued capital of the Staffex Co., Ltd., and the appointment to the board of Messrs. Favourable Outlook in Spite of Reduction in ProfitsSIR ERNEST OPPENHEIMER'S STATEMENT

THE TWENTIETH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF NCHANGA CONSOLIDATED COPPER MINES LIMITED will be held on August 29 in Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia.

The following are extracts from the statement by the chairman, Sir Ernest Oppenheimer, which has been circulated with the annual report and accounts:

"The company's year which ended on March 31, 1957, has been one of considerable activity. There has been a most satisfactory increase in the productive potential of the mine and in the ore reserves, and technical progress made has been impressive."

Opening of Undeveloped Orebody

The expansion of the ore-treatment plant to handle 360,000 tons per month is being carried out simultaneously with measures to open up a very large ore deposit known as the Nchanga Orebody by open-cast methods. Stripping of the overburden to expose the orebody has been satisfactorily accomplished, and ore from this deposit, which is of lower grade than the underground Nchanga West Orebody, will soon be fed to the enlarged metallurgical plant.

Second Open Pit

"During the year the consulting engineers recommended that the Chingola Orebody, a comparatively small, shallow deposit of high-grade copper, should be exploited. Stripping of the overburden covering this deposit should be completed by the end of 1957, and ore from this second open pit is expected to be available for treatment early in the new year."

More Flexible Production Policy

"The immediate purpose of these developments is not to increase the output of copper — although this will now be possible should market conditions alter in such a way as to make this desirable at any time in the future — but rather to allow a more flexible production policy than has hitherto been possible."

"With three sources of ore to draw from, it will be possible to supply ore to the plant on a more balanced basis and to adjust the grade and composition to suit metallurgical requirements, and thus achieve the most economical production of copper."

"The total ore reserves at the end of the year in the two open-cast orebodies and the Nchanga West Orebody are estimated at 164 million tons, which under present circumstances indicate a mining life of nearly 20 years. These estimated reserves are likely to be increased as further exploration and development work is completed."

Capital Expenditure Programmes

"I am pleased that during the past few years of exceptional prosperity much of the capital required for opening up the Nchanga Orebody and for expanding the plant has already been provided from profits. Further large sums will still be needed to complete this and other capital expenditure programmes, and, although most of this money will have to be spent in the immediate future, we have no intention of committing by appropriations from profits over several years, and not necessarily in the year in which the money is spent. The extent to which this can be carried out will depend on the profits available in any one year and upon the cash position of the company, but this policy would enable us to cushion the effects on future dividend distributions of lower copper prices should these persist."

"It is also proposed to use the general reserve of £300,000, which was created by appropriations from profits last year, to meet the major portion of the company's remaining commitment to provide about £5,000,000 of loans to the Federal Treasury over the next four years. These loans are being made to assist in the financing of the Kariba hydro-electric scheme, railways and other essential development projects in the Federation."

Price of Copper

"The price of copper, which so materially affected the level of profits of our company, has fluctuated within wide limits with a progressive movement downwards during the year. The London Metal Exchange price fell from £175 a ton in April 1956, to £240 a ton at the end of the company's year, March 1957, and at the end of June stood at £218 a ton."

"Last year I expressed a view that the very high prices obtained for copper in the early months of 1956 could not be expected to recur and that the price would in due course settle down at a lower level. Although there has developed an excess of supplies over the immediate demand for copper, it does seem that the price has fallen lower than the overall market conditions warrant."

"Provided there are no industrial setbacks in America and Europe during the current year, there are good reasons to expect that the demand for copper will once again expand and restore more stable conditions in the markets for the metal."

Company's Sound Position

"The marked decline in the world price of copper caused a corresponding fall in the company's profits. The net profit at £9,528,798 is some £7,755,000 lower than in the previous year. Nevertheless, our company's position remains very sound, and its prospects continue to be favourable, even though profits may not again reach the levels to which they had been raised through the high price of copper in the previous year."

The report and accounts have been posted to all stockholders. Other persons who are interested may obtain copies from the head office of the company, P.O. Box 108, Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, or from the transfer office at 44, Main Street, Birmingham, 1, or Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.1.
