THE GENERAL ELECTRIC CO. LTD., OF ENGLAND

in war — as in peace —
at the service of the Empire

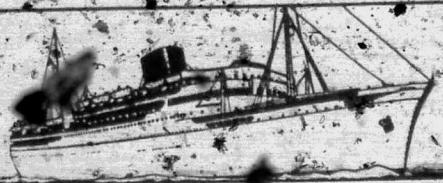

G.E.C. turbo-electric generating plant, up to the largest units required for modern utility or industrial power stations, has long been specified by power engineers at home and overseas. The speed at which industrial electrification has been increased is a measure of the Nation's war production. Inevitably, this has resulted in the entire research and technical resources of the G.E.C.—the largest electrical manufacturing organization in the Empire—together with the Company's vast production of electrical equipment being directed to the war effort, and diverted from normal supply channels.

When peace comes, however, the big technical advances made by the Company in all applications of electricity, including the important one of electronics, as a result of the urgent and ever changing problems connected with the war, will be available to all concerned with reconstruction in any part of the world.

Electrification Schemes

G.E.C. Electrification Schemes have been applied to all industries, including Aircraft Factories; Chemical Works; Collieries; Gold Factories; Gold Mines; Iron, Steel and Copper Works; Locomotive and Railway Carriage and Wagon Works; Motor Car Works; Ships and Shipyards; Textile Mills; Oil Mills and Refineries, etc.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

THE PRIME MINISTERS of the fighting Dominions and of the self-governing Colony of Southern Rhodesia gathered in London for consultation on one of the crucial moments in British history.

Prime Ministers in Conference. This, the public has been reminded, is a conference of Prime Ministers, not an Imperial Conference, and though there has been so little emphasis on the difference that most members of the House of Commons have persisted in referring to the meetings as an Imperial Conference, it is widely understood that Eire provides a very good or very bad reason for the departure from normal nomenclature. Shortly before the first Ministers of His Majesty's Governments in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia arrived in England, the Commons had devoted two days to a debate on Empire unity which was so attuned to facts which are all too often disregarded by leaders of the nation that an ardent Imperialist was able to comment that "the House has covered the Empire." The debate which provided striking evidence of a unity of purpose that cut across all the lines of party cleavage, was given generous space throughout the Press and well reported to the world by the British Broadcasting Corporation. Indeed, no discordant note was to be heard, for if some of the extremists were not prepared to praise the essentials of the Empire in the company of Mr. Shinwell and others who have sometimes appeared unaware of its true character and comparable contribution to the welfare of mankind, they had the grace to keep silent. To add to the satisfaction of those who have so often had to complain of Parliamentary misunderstandings, it was at this moment that it became known that a delegation of members of the House under the chairmanship of Sir Geoffrey Shakespeare, former Under-Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, was to visit the Union of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia. There has, moreover, been noticeable warmth in the greetings extended to Sir Godfrey Huggins, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, on his arrival in England, and an evident anxiety that merely technical definitions of constitutional status shall not limit his participations in talks of historic importance. Indeed, the fact that the territory which he so splendidly leads has not attained full Dominion stature makes it possible to regard him as a Colonial representative to which the Secretary of State for the Colonies could not aspire.

Mr. Churchill has said again, and very emphatically, that there can be no question of the surrender of any Colonial territory. That he should have needed to make such a reply to statements widely pub-

The Empire: One and Indivisible. is another proof of the growing realization throughout the world that the British Commonwealth and Empire together constitute as definite and inissoluble a unit as the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Republics or the Republic of China. British tolerance under extreme provocation and British disregard of the predatory designs of less civilized races, particularly those now ranged against us in war, contributed to the widespread belief that great advantages economic and political were to be obtained by playing one part of the Empire off against another. The powerful groups in various countries still adhere to that tenet, on the ground that the history of the inter-war years affords abundant evidence of the success of this policy by crafty and unscrupulous competitors, who until quite recently were not even required to include in their secret agreements with Great Britain adequate safeguards for the economic well-being of their Colonial Dependencies. That neglect will assuredly not be repeated, even under pressure of arguments about regionalism, but vigilance will be required nonetheless.

War has forced all reasonable beings to see that there is no bond between nations so strong as the undesirable ties which bind the sister and daughter States of the British Crown. Never before have they been so close to one another and British to their common ideals of freedom

Fidelity more evident than during that year throughout which, following the evacuation of Dunkirk, the Empire stood alone in its resistance to the Hun, the Italian and the Japanese. British history has known no finer hour, and could have provided no better proof that the King's subjects, however distant their dwelling-place, were determined upon the maintenance of their allegiance. It was their pride and pleasure to cast their pledge of fidelity in the teeth of the enemy—an enemy at the height of his strength and seemingly able to sweep aside the tiny forces which watched some of the Empire's frontiers. The Sudan and Kenya, for instance, had the power of resistance to the modern military machine assembled in Eritrea and Ethiopia. Mussolini and his minions, and the sea-lanes to the Red Sea and East Africa were manifestly threatened by the submarines of Germany and Japan. But if arithmetic has always bulked large in the strategic calculations of Britain which had convinced themselves of the invincibility of the Empire, that allegedly infallible institution was so irrational as to draw new strength from appalling statistics. As the King's peoples and Governments declined to be downcast in the face of fearful odds, so now they are modest in their confidence that they and their allies have created the forces and won the experience which spell the doom of Hitler, Tojo and the millions who have been their willing instruments. The British Ministers are gathered both to witness the opening of the final climactic in Europe and to draw designs for that post-war world which owes more to British fidelity than to any other single factor.

The Sudan: Past, Present and Future

Sir Angus Gillan on Development of Local Government

THE SUDAN has never sought advertisements and perhaps it has been fortunate in seldom having advertisement thrust upon it.

Except on three occasions it has never been a news paper headline country. The first covers the events leading to Gordon's death in Khartoum. The second was the reoccupation culminating in sufficient victory outside Omdurman. The war of 1914-1918 did not leave the Sudan entirely untouched, but the conquest of the hitherto tributary kingdom of Darfur, which was the direct outcome of the German incitement, and which might have attracted some attention in normal times, was completely overshadowed by greater events. So it was not until 1940, again through the Sudan emerged for a third time into the headlines of the Press.

Mussolini's conquest of Ethiopia, however, easily altered the strategic situation, and the Sudan Government had to think hard as to what would happen in case of a European war. Little help could be expected from home in the late thirties when this country wanted everything it could find, and more. Before the war and in the early part of the war the Sudan made efforts to make bricks without straw. The Railways built armoured trains and converted tugs into minisweepers; the Stores Department adapted the British to tropical conditions and covered the Emperor of Ethiopia's state umbrella; the Surveyors fished out thousands of maps for the Army and contrived lithographs for printing the Emperor's Amharic messages.

If Italy had come into the war in 1939, things would, to say the least, have been difficult. When she did declare war in 1940 it was fortunate that her entry coincided with the coming of the rains. The capture of Kassala and Gallabat was a setback, but it had no strategic value, and was largely offset by the moral ascendancy which the meagre Sudan forces gained in patrol actions during the period of waiting. Some good stories of this period remain to be told. At Khor Ashat, on the Eritrean northern frontier, there was a little watching-post of one British officer and 14 irregulars, together with a maximum of 30 unarmed camels. Much later the diary of a high Italian intelligence officer was captured. It included the record: "Reports of the enemy force at Khor Ashat have been greatly exaggerated. It may now be taken as certain that there are not more than two British brigades there, though they have a fair number of tanks."

By the end of the rains the whole situation had altered. Reinforcements and supplies had arrived. The initiative had passed to us. The vast plan campaign had been planned.

Two forces went through from the south under Cunningham and from the west under Platt, and in six months Mussolini's vaunted Italian East African Empire had ceased to exist. We Sudanis are proud that the Sudan Defence Force played a part second to none in General Platt's great polyglot multi-coloured army. In subsequent service in Libya too their reputation remained high. The administration, the cotton companies and other firms all played their full part, not only in releasing a very large proportion of their personnel for full-time service with the forces, but also in the Civilian Territorial Administration, which took over the organization, but in shouldering, with civilian staffs, the immense additional burdens in matters of supply, transport and a thousand other chores.

The Sudan is a country of just under one million square miles—larger than British India or the short-lived so-called African East African Empire. We used to be able to claim that nice round figure of one million square miles with a few miles to spare, but in the days of appeasement we had to cede a small patch of disputed land and rock with a few wells in the extreme north-west, just south of Kassala to keep him quiet. It didn't do us much harm or him much good, but it just spoiled the round figure. I fancy that recent events may have led to at least a de facto restatement of this sentimental grievance.

The Sudan is divided into eight provinces, a considerable reduction compared with earlier days, made possible by improved communications. It consists of desert in the north, savanna in the north-east, a central plateau, and a country in the central zone which is the most difficult to raise good crops in a normal year, and maintains half stock in savanna, swamp and bush in the south.

There are in effect two Sudans: the north Moslem predominantly Arabic-speaking, backward by western standards but with some measure of sophistication; the south, utterly primitive, pagan and pagan except where missionary influence is increasingly making itself felt.

We are making an honest attempt to train the people for eventual self-government, but the rate of progress in the north and south must be very different. Within a calculable time we should be able to hand over to the Moslems of the north a very large measure of self-government, but it must make sure that self-determination for the north does not mean exploitation of the south. When one hears even an educated Moslem let slip in an unguarded moment that "Al-ahab al-abid"—the country of the slaves—one realizes that the predatory Arab instinct is not yet dead. In the interest of their own political future the northern Sudanese would be well advised not to create too much nationalistic importance to a mere name fortuitously applied to what nature has designed as two countries.

There are then two things which the Sudan is: the north and the south. And there are two things which the Sudan is not: it is not part of Egypt and it is not a British Colony. It is the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan—a strange and typically British hybridization and a condominium.

Penetration began in the first half of the 19th century, started by a young Roman to embark on his route in starting adventures—but by and large the Sudan was closed book to the outside world until the beginning of the 19th century. In the modern Egyptian connexion began in 1820, when Ismael, son of Mohammed Ali, founder of the present Egyptian dynasty, invaded the Sudan in search of conquest, ivory, slaves. Penetration was gradual and never complete, but Egypt, at least nominally, ruled the Sudan for the next 60 odd years. It was not a creditable chapter, but one of oppression, bribery, corruption, farming of taxes, purchase of office, and the slave trade winked at when not actually encouraged. Pressure of outside opinion led to the appointment of a few foreigners to introduce reforms, but they could do little among the many. The outstanding figure, of course, is Charles George Gordon.

Gordon in the Sudan

The scene was all set for rebellion if a leader should appear, and so he did in the person of Mohammed Ahmed, the self-styled Mahdi, and up to his lights and in the earlier stages, patriot and reformer. Discontent and fanaticism played into each other's hands, and the pitiable lack of training and morale of the Egyptian troops allowed the Mahdi to achieve initial successes which gave him prestige, arms and an ever larger following. Within a couple of years practically the whole of the northern Sudan except the garrison towns fell into his power.

Britain would not, Egypt could not, join the struggle. It was decided to evacuate the garrisons, and Gordon was appointed to the task. It was impossible to evacuate the outlying garrisons and Gordon's conscience, rebellious at what seemed to him to be the desertion of his friends. He decided not to get out but stuck it out. The British conscience too rebelled against desertion—the desertion of Gordon—and the Government was forced, too late, to send a relief expedition. The expedition arrived within sight of Khartoum to find that it had fallen and that Gordon had been killed a few days before on January 26, 1885.

For 18 years the curtain again closes on the Sudan, to cover another period of tyranny and misrule under the Mahdi's successor the Khalifa Abdullahi. In these years the population was reduced by pestilence, famine and inter-tribal war from an estimated eight to less than three millions.

Meanwhile, through force of circumstances we had become more deeply involved in Egyptian affairs. Finance, administration and the army had been reorganized. The menace of the Southern frontier could now be tackled, the claims of humanity answered, and Gordon's death avenged. A joint Anglo-Egyptian reoccupation was decided on, the battle of Qmdurman was fought on September 2, 1898, and the Sudan

Government was born under the flags of Great Britain and Egypt.

I knew the Sudan while civilised government was still in its youth—before the camel gave place to the motor car, when we inoculated cattle one day and vaccinated humans another. It was still largely a military administration, and the Sudan was a great debt to those old soldier-administrators who served under Kitchener and Wingate and built up the tradition of honesty of purpose, economy and single-mindedness. More imagination, more moral, if not physical courage, more self-sacrifice were required today. It was easy enough to tell a recruit's self where he got off, but much more difficult in dealing with a modern, sophisticated Sudanese, whether a Government official or a tribal leader, to decide whether it must not be you to get off and for him to get on.

Three years ago the Sudan was a lowly marksmanship all-embracing the whole of the Sudan, the high-class Egyptians and Syrians in the towns. It would be difficult to persuade most of the senior administrators of that time that within a generation 90% of the commandant officers of the Sudan would be Sudanese. Now more than 50 Sudanese hold first division posts previously held by professionally trained Indians, and the freebooters are proving them to be.

Native Administration

Official blessing was given to the policy of Native administration or indirect rule some 15 years ago. A generation of educated Sudanese can follow this. Wrecked traditional local authority, we had to start from scratch, no tribal councils, no nominal tribes. We had therefore to invent a new planning, and we were, I think, able to prove that native administration, (so-called), need not be undemocratic, need not be vulgar, but common sense. It is undemocratic. We could see that the chief not only had a council but used it. We could support the good chief but not the bad chief was replaced by popular choice—not indeed by ballot, but by that African method of discussing, wrangling, obstructing and compromising which at last leads to an expression of corporate will, and which I suggest is just as democratic as putting a piece of paper in a box.

The devolutionary policy was at first highly suspect among the educated Sudanese. They looked on it as a machiavellian scheme to subdue them to the mud, to the savanna, and to make the Sudan serve for subsequent foreign domination, to their obvious detriment. This, of course, was nonsense. We wanted to turn the tribal leaders into educated Sudanese and meanwhile to persuade some of the educated minority (often their own sons or brothers) to play a useful part in court and council. But these earlier suspicions were not unnatural. I think too much of the discussion and correspondence was kept on the "strictly confidential" level. Also, in the first flush of enthusiasm, some of the protagonists of Native administration were inclined to talk in vague, exaggerated terms of Native State and prophecy the virtual extinction of the central bureaucracy.

Native administration is a local and not a national unit, and so a synthesis can surely be achieved between it and the central administration. This synthesis becomes apparent when you look on the Native administration as the local government authority, which is what I prefer to call it, and the tribal or territorial administration corresponds roughly to the county council. It may be subdivided into urban and rural districts with their subordinate authorities. And the large tribalized towns are the county boundaries with their own independent municipal authorities. A further expansion of local government is now in process of creation in the shape of provincial councils, intended for the representation, part advisory part executive, of all interests in the six northern provinces. Four have already been set up. They can be extended to the south when conditions allow.

Educated Sudanese are progressively realizing that Native administration does not imply the reactionary policy which they originally feared. Quite a number are now playing an active part in it. Before the war we used to send parties of educated officials and others for tours in Great Britain to get something of the background and see some of the activities in which they were professionally interested. Some said in effect: "The Houses of Parliament were very impressive but there was much talk and it all seemed rather remote." Then we saw some of the local authorities at work. We sat on the bench, we saw the sanitary inspector, the medical officer and the surveyor at work, and we saw how you run your schools and hospitals. And we said: "This is how the British really govern themselves." And if you want us to be honest, it seemed remarkably like what you have been calling Native administration, but we didn't see the connexion before.

This Sudan system has been subjected to the test of war, and in one case even to enemy occupation and it has not been found wanting. Of the local authorities on the Kassala front, this tribute has been recorded: "The Kassala district must have special mention. In the last year or two the leadership and government of our districts have been more and more

Sir Godfrey Huggins Arrives

For Meetings of Empire Prime Ministers

SIR GODFREY HUGGINS, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, arrived London early last Friday morning with General Smuts, Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa. They had spent two days in Cairo. Their journey was made in an Avro York aircraft, escorted by Spitfires.

Mr. Mackenzie King and Mr. Peter Fraser, Prime Ministers of Canada and New Zealand, had arrived a day earlier, and Mr. Ernest Bevin, Minister of Supply, arrived yesterday, having been delayed in Washington by illness.

It has been officially known that the conferences, which began on Monday, will cover all the main problems of the Commonwealth and Empire, and that they will be attended as necessary by the Secretaries of State for the Dominions, the Colonies and India, by other British Cabinet Ministers, and by India's two representatives in the Imperial Cabinet.

Colonial Lopin' for Discussion

Among the topics to be discussed are those of Colonial welfare and development, the grouping of Colonies and their councils (in some cases perhaps under Dominion leadership), migration within the Empire, Imperial Preference, and the difficulty of creating permanent Empire Secretariat with a staff drawn from Great Britain, the Dominions and some of the Colonies.

An official spokesman has emphasised that the discussions are essentially consultative and exploratory, and that there is no intention to seek definite agreements during full-scale negotiations. The Dominion states would wish to consult with their own Cabinets and Parliaments on various matters.

Sir Godfrey Huggins is accompanied by Captain J. G. Dudley, of the Southern Rhodesian Permanent Staff, as A.D.C. and private secretary. With General Smuts have come Major "Jannie" Smuts as A.D.C. to his father; Mr. D. D. Forsyth, Secretary for External Affairs and Secretary to the Prime Minister's office, and Mr. John Martin.

On landing, Sir Godfrey stated that if the Old Country really co-operated with the other members of the Commonwealth there was no need to worry much about anybody else, and for that reason he was looking forward to the conferences. The reports he had heard about the hard work put into the land in this country had been verified by what he had seen from the aircraft as he travelled over English soil; he had noted in particular the disappearance of much of the grassland and the substitution of arable.

The King and Queen gave a dinner party on Monday evening to mark the opening of the meetings of Prime Ministers. The Prime Ministers of Great Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia were among the guests.

Commenting on Sir Godfrey's arrival, The Times wrote:

"With General Smuts came Sir Godfrey Huggins, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, the territory which ranks only a little lower than the Dominions, being self-governing except in external affairs, which remain under the general control of the British Government."

Southern Rhodesian delegations have attended Imperial Conferences in the past, and Sir Godfrey Huggins has been warmly invited to London to add his voice in the present meetings—especially, it may be assumed, when the regional groupings of territories and their future basis are examined. He comes as the leader of an Empire Cabinet with its own plans and desires; he has more than once advocated the grouping of the Rhodesias and Nyasaland and, a further grouping of the East African territories."

M.P.s to Visit Africa

Brief Biographies of Delegation

LAST week we announced that eight members of the House of Commons were to visit South Africa. Herewith we give brief biographical facts about the delegation.

SIR GILBERT SHAKESPEARE, Bt., the Chairman of Liberal National Member for Norwich, which he has represented since 1929, first as a Liberal. He was born in 1893 and educated at Highgate School and Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was President of the Union. He served on the Western Front in World War I, and was soon afterwards a member of the Labour Party, supporting Lloyd George from 1922 to 1924. National Liberal Member for Wellington in 1924, he became a Labour Member of Parliament in 1929. He is a public journalist, was Chief Whip of the Liberal Nationals for a year from 1931, and then successively Parliamentary Private Secretary to the Ministry of Health, the Board of Education, the Admiralty, and the Department of Overseas Trade. In 1939 he became Under-Secretary of State for the Dominions. Sir Geoffrey was made a baronet two years ago.

SIR ALFRED BEIT, Bt., Conservative Member for Pancras South-East since 1931, was born in 1888, the son of the late Sir Alfred Beit.

He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and married the second daughter of the late Major Clement Attlee and Lady Hilda Nettleship. He is a trustee of the Beit Fellowships and a director of the Port of London Authority, a medical research and a director of London & South Eastern Railways, Ltd. He has paid previous visits to the Rhodesias and East Africa.

WILLIAM HINCHINGROOKE, Conservative Member for South Dorset since 1935, was born in 1906 and is the heir of the ninth Earl of Sandwich. Educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, he went to France in 1920, passed through the Staff College in the following year, and was then appointed to the General Staff. He was a private secretary to Mr. Baldwin in 1932-34, honorary treasurer of the Junior Imperial League for the next two years, and is Chairman of the Tory Parliamentary Committee in the House of Commons.

Captained England in Rugby Football

MR. W. WAKEFIELD, National Conservative Member for Swindon since 1935, is the well-known athlete. Born in 1888, he was educated at Sedbergh School and Pembroke College, Cambridge. He served in the R.N.A.S. and the R.A.F. in the last war and retired in 1923 as a flight lieutenant. He rejoined at the outbreak of this war for flying duties and for two years was Director of the Air Training Corps. He was in succession Parliamentary private secretary to the Marquess of Hartington, Mr. H. Hudson and Captain Harold Baldwin, a member of the Church of England Advisory Council of Empire Settlement, Vice-President of the Royal Society of Arts, and a Governor of the Middlesex Hospital and Twickenham Hospital. Mr. Wakefield has captained England, Cambridge University, Middlesex, the Services and the Royal Air Force at Rugby football and is a member of the Committee of the Rugby Union. He has also been prominent as a cricketer, swimmer, runner and tennis and squash player.

COLONEL RALPH RAYNER, M.B.E., has represented the Totnes Division of Devonshire as a Unionist since 1935. He joined the Duke of Wellington's Regiment in 1914 and later transferred to the Royal Signals, serving in France from 1915 to 1917 and being twice mentioned in dispatches. He was in India for nine years, being on active service in Afghanistan and later holding a Signals Command on the North-West Frontier. In 1928 he went to Canada as A.D.C. to the Governor-General. At the outbreak of this war he went to France with G.H.Q. and came back from Dunkirk.

MR. W. GLENVILLE HALE, Labour Member for the Colne Valley Division of Yorkshire since 1938, is a barrister. Born in 1887, he served throughout the last war, first with The Buffs and later with the Tank Corps, being wounded and mentioned in dispatches. He represented Portsmouth Central in the House of Commons from 1929 to 1931.

MR. ARTHUR PEARSON has been Labour Member for Pontypridd since 1938. He is a J.P.

MR. HUGH MCNEIL, since 1941, Labour Member for Greenock, is Parliamentary Private Secretary to Mr. Noel Baker, Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of War Transport. He was born in 1910, educated at Glasgow University, enjoyed journalism, and served on the Corporation of Glasgow from 1932 to 1938, during which period he fought unsuccessful elections against Mr. Walter Elliot in Kelvin Way. Col. Gore-Browne Interviewed

Remarkable Progress of Many Africans

COLONEL STEWART GORE-BROWNE, Chairman of the non-official members of the Legislative Council in Northern Rhodesia, who recently arrived in London by air for consultations with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, had several important interviews at the Colonial Office prior to the departure for Lusaka of the Governor, Sir John Waddington, and has since continued his discussions on various subjects. He has told EAST AFRICA that Rhodesia met with a most cordial reception which makes him confident that his visit will be abundantly justified.

While it would be premature to refer in detail to the subjects which have been under examination, we are authorized to state that the representative of the non-official members of the Legislature has stressed the great importance of a post-war reorganization of Colonial administration, in regard to the Protectorate in general and to the post-war revision of copper production in particular. He has emphasized the point often made by Colonial spokesmen that even an unavoidable reduction is better than a state of uncertainty.

Colonel Gore-Browne—perhaps the first non-official nominated by a Governor to represent Native interests in Council, who has also been elected by the elected non-official members to be their leader—is specially qualified to speak not only from the African standpoint but for the whole non-official side of the House, which trusts his judgment based as it is on more than 30 years' residence in Central Africa.

The progress made by many Africans in Northern Rhodesia has, he feels, been remarkable, and the question of giving them adequate political representation is therefore by no means merely academic. Following a motion from the non-official side in the Legislative Council in the latter part of 1942, the Government accepted the proposal to institute "African" provincial or regional councils, elected by the chief councils and by the African urban councils which were already in existence in most of the towns.

Representation of Native Interest

The first of these regional councils had met recently on the Copperbelt, and it had shown the participants at their best. The chiefs who are imbued with the traditional respect for tribal ties and authority, found that the largely detribalized and modern-thinking young men from the mining areas treated them with courtesy, so that both parties were quickly at their ease. A good basis having thus been established, the representative of the old and the new outlooks were equally candid and helpful in expressing their views.

Regional Councils of this kind seem to Colonel Gore-Browne to be of very hopeful augury. Eight or 10 will have been constituted before the end of the year, and the intention is that they should meet at once every six months. Colonel Gore-Browne considers that the member representing Native interest should make a point of attending all such meetings, and of maintaining as many other contacts as possible with his far-flung constituencies—in a country the size of Northern Rhodesia so that he may be sure of knowing and voicing the best opinions expressed by Africans.

It will be recalled that he has said in public on more than one occasion that he believes there ought to be at least two non-official members representing Africans on the Legislature of Northern Rhodesia; and he is not likely to have missed the opportunity of pressing the point in his talks with the Secretary of State.

When the regional councils have proved their value, they are to elect a central council for the Africans of the whole territory, and in his opinion it should not be very long before this central council became competent to elect its own representatives to the Legislature. That such representatives should be Africans whom suitable Africans are available was, he said, a conclusion which no fair-minded individual would be able to resist.

Colonel Gore-Browne expects to remain in this country for about another two months.

Campaign of Enlightenment

Urged by Joint East African Board

EAST AFRICA'S URGENT NEED TO GET THE TRUTH UNDERSTOOD IN THIS COUNTRY WAS DISCUSSED AT THE last meeting of the Executive Committee of the Joint East African Board, at which MR. HUMPHREY LEGGATT, M.P., Mr. HARRAPIN, both of whom are present.

Colonel G. E. Poynting, M.P., Chairman of the Board, said there were many evidences in the press, in both Houses of Parliament and on other platforms that the most unfortunate misconceptions about British East and Central Africa were prevalent among people who ought to know better, but whose ignorance led them to mislead others. Some of these well-meaning and certainly well-intentioned people were in error in many of the conclusions to which wide currency was given when they expressed them in newspaper articles or letters or when they briefed Parliament and other speakers.

Mr. Hunter said that East Africans would welcome an opportunity of open and unprejudiced discussion with those who had distorted views of the territories in general and of Kenya in particular. The fault was not all on one side. Kenya had not told its own story sufficiently clearly and often, and had certainly not understood some of the extremists in this country and their strange ideas about the Colony.

Kenya Running A Great Risk

Colonel Scovell considered that Kenya was running a great risk in not being more vocal.

MR. ALFRED JENKINS was convinced that a serious need for the constant attacks upon East Africa had to be immediately and ably answered by someone resident in London and claiming the confidence of Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika Territory. It had to be remembered that the faulty education of the inter-war period, the general inattention to Empire affairs in the schools had provided the enemies of East Africa with fertile fields in which to sow their seeds of mis-trust. One previous task was that of persuading the Board of Education to see that children were given far better instruction as to the meaning of the Empire, its history, geography and general bearing upon British life. When, not so long before the outbreak of this war, our politicians were within an acre of seeking to appease Germany still further by the return of Tanganyika Territory, funds had been raised to form the Colonial League, which had done very valuable work in spreading the truth about that danger. Something of the same kind ought now to be done by and for East Africa.

Sir Humphrey Leggatt pointed out that many of the lies started about East Africa could never be overtaken. It was necessary to anticipate such inversions of the facts by getting the public to understand the fundamental truth. A beginning had been made by arranging that schools should hear lectures on Empire subjects, but the number of such addresses ought to be increased a hundredfold.

The difficulty in that respect, said the Chairman, was that of finding good speakers who had recently returned to this country from a Dominion or Colony; there were plenty of willing volunteers who were 10 or 20 years out of date, but many of them were much more harm than good. In 1940, when the Colonial League had been formed in Kenya and had funds for a public relations officer in London, it was to be hoped that a suitable man might soon be found.

The WarH.M.S. "Tanganyika" LaunchedS. Rhodesian Air Training Scheme*

H.M.S. TANGANYIKA, the new fleet mine-sweeper, built with funds subscribed in Tanganyika Territory, has been launched at a Clyde-side shipyard. The launching ceremony was performed by Mrs. Lub, wife of the Administrator of the Colony of Tanganyika. A message of good wishes from the Governor was read.

Mr. R. K. Rice, who represented the Colonial Office, said that Tanganyika had contributed £274,000 to the Imperial Government for war purposes, £22,000 for aircraft, and £63,000 for war charities.

Sir Ernest Guest, Southern Rhodesia's Air Minister, said during the recent Budget debate: "The Colony's air training scheme has reached its peak sooner than anywhere else in the Empire. There will be no capital expenditure for air schools after the end of 1944."

Major-General C. H. C. Vincent, D.F.C., and Bar, A.F.C., the new Commandant of the Empire Central Flying School, has had 31 years' war service in the Middle East and Africa, and has flown some 250 air battles.

Dr. Edward Jaget, Bishop of Southern Rhodesia, has completed a three week tour of the Western Desert. His brother, General Sir Bernard Paget, G.O.C.-in-C., Middle East.

Pilot Officer John Chatterton, R.A.F.V.R., of No. 44 (Rhodesia) Squadron, has been awarded the D.F.C. The citation states:

"This officer has completed very many sorties and has displayed commendable skill, courage and devotion to duty. His determination and fire-fighting qualities were well illustrated in a recent sortie against Jeddah. On the outward flight the aircraft was hit by anti-aircraft fire and a fragment of shrapnel shattered the windscreen above Pilot Officer Chatterton's head, and he was hit and stunned but soon recovered. Undeterred by the intense cold caused by the wind blowing through the broken windscreen, he continued his mission. When nearing the target the bomber was again hit by fire from the ground defences. Damage was sustained which resulted in a complete failure of the oxygen supply. Nevertheless Pilot Officer Chatterton pressed home his attack and afterwards flew the aircraft to base. His example of courage, determination and devotion to duty was highly commendable."

Fight Sergeants Alfred Holden, John Murphy and J. R. G. Oswick, all of the R.A.F.V.R. and No. 44 (Rhodesia) Squadron, have been awarded the D.F.M.

Two officers of the Sudan Defence Force, El Kaimakam M. B. Stubbs Bey, M.C., and El Kaimakam E. W. Edmonson Bey, M.C., have been awarded the French War Cross with gold and silver star respectively in recognition of their services in the Middle East.

The Royal Air Force Benevolent Fund has received a further £100 from the Northern Rhodesia Central War Charities Fund, which has also sent another £100 to the Lord Mayor's Empire Air Raid Distress Fund.

The Sudan War Supply Department is to be housed in a new Khartoum building which took only six weeks to erect.

The Stores and Ordnance Department of the Sudan produced several million articles in 1943, compared with 300,000 in 1937-39. Between August 1942 and the end of 1943 about a million tool-handles and one and three-quarters million tent pins and mauls were sent to the Middle East. Other articles manufactured locally from available material and salvage scrap included tools of all descriptions, bolts, locks, rivets, hinges, and a large number of metal parts.

A model loom won second prize for an azari from Uganda in a handicraft competition in the East Africa Command.

U.S. Interest in Middle East

An American economic mission composed of experts in commerce, finance, industry, and agriculture, has been constituted in Cairo to co-ordinate American economic activities in the Middle East and work for their expansion. Mr. James Landis, the director of the mission, said in outlining its objectives: "The United States has a vital interest in the future of the Middle East. It seeks those resources that are or can be made surplus in fair exchange for the goods and technical aid that the United States can provide. It seeks them in no spirit of aggrandisement or exploitation, but in the belief that such fair exchange promotes the welfare of those engaged in it. To the United States the improvement of the economic system of the Middle East, in terms of production and equitable distribution of wealth, is of importance."

After the war the Universities' Mission to Central Africa will need 30 more priests, at least 100 trained teachers, and many nurses and doctors. — Dr. Gerald Broomfield.

"Unless we are prepared to make sacrifices after the war, sacrifices according to our ability to pay or give work, we shall not get very far with the social advancement of this country." — Mr. M. P. Barrow, addressing the Legislative Council of Nyasaland.

The release of 50 civil servants has been applied for as a matter of urgency, and 20 have been released. Other releases may be considered on a non-urgent basis. — Mr. G. B. Macmillan, Colonial Secretary, speaking in the Legislative Council of Northern Rhodesia.

"Northern Rhodesia like Southern Rhodesia is in the main just as suitable for Europeans as for Africans. Even European children of the third generation born in the Rhodesias, and they show no signs of physical or mental deterioration." — Dr. A. Scott, addressing the Rhodes Livingstone Institute.

"Although we try to put forward honest criticisms to Government when necessary, the atmosphere at Entebbe is conducive to recrimination and does tend to make some of us too critical of obvious Government regulation." — Mr. H. R. Fisher, speaking in the Uganda Legislative Council.

"Our official nursing sisters in this Colony receive a salary of £500 per annum and there they stop, but the Official Gazette of Kenya has notified a vacancy for an efficient (special grade) European woman shorthand typist at a salary of £440 raising to £500." — Mr. George A. Tyson, of Nairobi.

"The man who ruins his own family by squandering his estate to please the world at large... is a disreputable moral man and for far too long has Great Britain been engrossed in just such an orgy, to the grave hurt of herself and of her long suffering but still loyal Empire family." — Mr. A. K. Chesterton.

"Nyasaland has had visits from commissions, committees and individuals too numerous to mention, but their recommendations appear to have received scant attention at the Colonial Office, and no long-range and settled policy of development has been evolved, initiated or fostered." — Mr. H. G. Duncan, M.L.C.

"Prospects for rubber producers appear to be good for many years ahead, as the supply is unlikely to exceed the demand for some years after possession of Java and Sumatra is recovered and the estates in those countries can be restored to normal working." — Mr. H. J. Welch, Chairman, Rubber Plantations Investment Trust.

"Grants to mission agencies this year will approximate £148,000, to which must be added by far the greater part of funds voted by Native authorities. This is a clear indication that Government is entrenching rather than surrendering its long-established policy of active co-operation with missions in the educational field." — The Director of Education of Uganda.

"It has been incorrectly reported that 'no living person outside the tribe had previously seen the coronation ceremony of the divine king of the Shilluk, though it was described by the late Patrick Munro, former Governor of Khartoum Province. In fact, both Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Munro were present at the coronation ceremony of Hajji about 26 years ago.' — Miss Margaret H. Munro.

"Uganda became a British Protectorate in 1894, when Rosebery was Prime Minister. There were many misgivings about making this addition to our responsibilities, and nobody was less enthusiastic than Sir William Harcourt, who had to announce the policy to the House of Commons. In private he predicted that Uganda would become a squallid colony, but that it would be more completely justified by events." — The Manchester Guardian.

Empire Planning.—Our Allies have nothing to lose and much to gain through a British Commonwealth resolved on economic planning and organized for prosperity. It would afford me the greatest pleasure if the Conference resolved to create an Empire Economic Council entrusted with the minimum task of inquiring into the resources of the Dominions and Colonies, to consider the possibility of development and decide upon the most effective methods of engaging in the same exploitation of those resources for the common good. My delight would be enormously increased if the Conference mutually further inquiry into the minimum needs of the whole Empire population, including all cultured people and the teeming millions in India, so that Freedom from Want should become a positive part of Empire policy. These are the two main tasks that must precede the foundations of effective economic unity. On the conclusions that are reached depends whether we can foster a policy of controlled migration, so that the man-power of the Empire can be used to the best advantage. Demands for a statement of post-war agricultural policy have always met with Government resistance, probably because no sound scheme could be formulated with regard to the food-producing resources of the Dominions. Well, let us get on with it, so that our farmers and farm workers know where they are. All this is far removed from the old-fashioned red in the face kind of Imperialism which in the past aroused the resentment of other nations and caused political controversy among ourselves. It has nothing to do with self-sufficiency, or the placing of barriers between ourselves and America or Soviet Russia. We must engage in international trade to provide ourselves with sufficient food and raw materials for our manufactures. So must the Dominions who seek an outlet for their surplus products. The more we trade the better, but what has this to do with the large-scale planning and the development of our colossal Empire assets so that we may develop them into our conception of living standards for every member of our vast Empire population? —Mr. R. Shinwell, M.P.

Imperial War Shrine.—London should have an Imperial shrine to which pilgrims would come from all quarters of the Empire and which would embrace all other memorials. Perhaps a site could be found on the Embankment. —Admiral Lord Chatfield.

Equivocal Portugal.—Over the past year Portuguese supplies of wolfram to Germany have been about six times those sent from Spain. Dr. Salazar has sought to justify Portugal's ambiguous attitude in a manner reminiscent of Denmark's tactics of pursuing simultaneously several separate and contradictory policies. His formula consists of three points: (1) as an Overseas Power, Portugal has sought to fulfil her alliance with Britain, and thus has granted Britain the use of the Azores bases; (2) as a Continental European Power, Portugal has insisted on her rights as a neutral by virtue of which she has sold large quantities of vital minerals to Germany at an enormous profit; and (3) as an Iberian State, Portugal maintains intimate relations with Spain.

The Observer.

World Air Line.—“We look forward to the day when each transport plane arriving at an airfield will carry on its wings not the mark of some one nation but a symbol of the world’s practical acceptance of its new unity. If World Airway cannot be realized, we propose as a second best a system of five or more regional air unions, including Europe, the British Commonwealth, the Americas (or North and South American Unions), the Soviet Union, and East Asia. In so far as air transport remains in national hands, Britain’s air services should be wholly nationalized. Britain’s contribution to the advancement of civil flying should be expanded by greatly increasing the provision for aeronautical education and research.” —Labour Party statement.

Kenya’s Good Fortune.—Kenya has been extraordinarily lucky throughout the whole length of this war. We have prospered financially both by having a ready market for everything we can produce and at very fair prices, and because the presence of large bodies of armed forces in our midst has meant that a great deal of honey has been spilt in the Colony. Compared to other countries restrictions on our amenities have been trivial. Our food position, in spite of minor annoyances as far as we Europeans are concerned, is probably as good as, if not better than, in any other part of the Empire. In short, where war has brought misery and ruin to so many people elsewhere we in this backwater, through no particular virtue of our own, have in most cases prospered by the war. —Kenya Weekly News.

Gold and The New Plan.—

While there is abundant cause for satisfaction with the status of gold in the international monetary plan, it would be a disservice to South Africa to assume that this country’s commercial and financial trade is confined to the Americas and continental deals in gold. On the contrary, the interests of the Union require its active participation in the tasks of restoration and expansion of international trade on the broadest possible basis. Under the plan gold will again be the lynchpin of international trade but in conditions which should remove distrust and fear. A harsh reality which might undermine confidence in gold to any degree would be no more in the interest of the gold-producing countries than of others. In a sense gold will again be on trial, and it is particularly important to the gold-producing countries that the safeguards provided should be adequate for any emergency. For that present, it is doubtful whether many countries would be ready to declare the par value of their currencies in terms of gold and a modification of the relevant provision in this respect may be found expedient. The plan provides an unrestricted field for the marketing of newly-mined gold, and thus marks its disapproval of any suggestion for the regulation of production.

Star, Johannesburg.

Commercial Courage.—Because of my faith in the future of British coal-mining I extended my Seaham collieries at a cost of £1,000,000. Employing about 8,000 men, they should eventually produce a million tons annually. But before that million tons a year can come up, a million pounds sterling must have been sunk down it or in surface equipment. It took the entire risk. If it wholly succeeds, the community take a very large share of benefit. I doubt if in the future individuals will be found to take such risks, and if failing individuals, the State will take them. What Government would have started, as I did, to dig in a Durham turnip field for coal believed to lie somewhere under the North Sea? What Chancellor would have sanctioned the expenditure? Seaham or Horden or Thorne, to mention only a few undertakings, would never have been started if the nation would not have suffered great loss had it not been for courageous owners taking risks. —The Marquis of Londonderry.

Sir Richard Rankine, a former British Resident in Zanzibar and Chief Secretary in both Nyasaland and Uganda, has given a most interesting broadcast in the Pacific Service of the B.B.C. on "Old Times in Fiji," which had been under British rule for less than 25 years when he first went to that part of the Colonial Empire as a cadet.

Mr. Ian Hoy Simpson, editor of the Ethiopian Herald and controller of the English radio programmes in Addis Ababa, has left Ethiopia. Mr. William M. Steen is acting editor of the Herald, a weekly newspaper published by the Ethiopian Press Department.

Obituary

Lady Bagshawe, wife of Sir Arthur Bagshawe, Director from 1912 to 1935 of the Bureau of Hygiene and Tropical Diseases in London, has died near Farnham. Sir Arthur became a medical officer in Uganda in 1900, served with the Lango Expedition of 1901 and with the Anglo-German Boundary Commission from 1902 to 1904. He was Director of the Sleeping Sickness Bureau from 1908 to 1912.

Lady Wenlock, widow of Captain Arthur Lawley, the first Administrator of Matabeleland after its creation, died near Bristol last week. Her late husband, the last of four brothers to succeed to the Wenlock peerage, left Rhodesia to become Governor of Western Australia, but two years later Lord Milner asked for him as Lieutenant Governor of the newly-conquered Transvaal. Lady Lawley was most popular in Rhodesia and South Africa. She was an admirable hostess and great traveller. She was made G.B.E. for services during the last war.

IMPORTERS

No Criticisms

Mr. G. F. Clay, speaking as Director of Supplies in Uganda, has paid public tribute to the efficiency with which the Uganda Loading Committee "has handled to the satisfaction of all the use of the railway in Uganda the evacuation from Uganda of the essential commodities now being produced. So far as I am aware, not a single voice has been raised in criticism of any action of that purely non-official Committee, which has operated at no cost to Government."

Facilities Inadequately Used

Mr. D. P. W. Wilson, Acting Director of Education in Zanzibar, told the Legislative Council recently that though 95% of the Arab and African children in the Protectorate were not receiving secular instruction, present educational facilities were not being fully used. Existing rural schools had room for 500 more pupils, and if attendances were only 90% of the increased capacity, the present staff and accommodation would enable an additional 1,000 more children to be taught.

Tribute to African Medical Students

Major Peter Osier Ward, in peace-time a medical consultant in London, and now serving in the R.A.M.C. in East Africa, who has been examining medical students in East and South Africa, has reported that while African students in Uganda are not up to the standard of the most brilliant of the South Africans, they are at least up to the average of the European medical students in the Union. This judgment was recently made public in Uganda by the Director of Medical Services for the Protectorate.

Mr. H. V. L. Swartz

Mr. H. V. L. Swartz, who has been appointed editor of the Journal of the Royal African Society following the resignation of Mr. Corbyn, was educated at Wellington and New College and was Gibbs Scholar in Modern History at Oxford in 1935-6, taking a First in History in the latter year. He entered the Colonial Office in 1937, was transferred to the Dominions Office, and left in 1941 to join the Overseas Division of the British Broadcasting Corporation, where he has specialized in Colonial matters. He does a monthly programme on Colonial affairs to the Dominions and the United States of America.

Native Welfare Work in Nairobi

Captain Eric Reid, who was censor in Mombasa from the outbreak of war until a motor accident and the deterioration of his eyesight through constant reading of closely written script made it necessary for him to ask for his release, is now Native Welfare Officer to the Nairobi Municipality, which since the appointment of Mr. Colchester as Native Affairs Officer, has done increasingly good work, not merely in the provision of better housing, clinics, nurseries and spinning and weaving centres, but in keeping young people off the streets and out of gaol by giving them an interesting life, extending recreational facilities and generally creating the right atmosphere.

From Feudalism to Parliamentary Government

Before the Ethiopian Parliament went into recess recently for two months, the Emperor addressed the members, saying that the establishment of the constitution had imposed a heavy weight upon the feudal life of the country, but that it was already producing benefits, as was clear from the fact that men of the people were being appointed to posts previously reserved to nobles. The President of Parliament, Blatengula Belatcho Yadete, said in reply that the representatives of the 12 provinces had worked steadily in Addis Ababa for 18 months and welcomed the opportunity of returning to their people to explain their responsibilities and renew contacts.

Production Targets

Tanganyika Territory has set itself a production target for 1944 of 172,000 tons of foodstuffs (including 56,000 tons of rice, 36,000 tons of maize, 18,000 tons of millet and a similar quantity of other cereals) and 50,000 bales of cotton. The foodstuffs include the quantities required by growers for their own consumption, and the totals have been reached by aggregating the estimates of local production committees, Native authorities and administrative and agricultural officers.

Kenya's Dehydration Industry

Kenya's dehydrated vegetable industry, employing more than 15,000 people, nearly 10,000 African growers are getting good returns by selling vegetables to the factories, the best plots having given an average yield of 15 cwt. per acre during the last four rains. The factories employ a further 5,000 Africans, and 30 Asians and 30 Europeans. The two main factories supply large quantities of dried vegetables to the Middle East Forces. Expansion may be limited when the hydro-electric plant to drive the factory at Sagani River is completed at Karatina.

Bonus for Good Dairy Farming

In furtherance of its policy of guaranteeing higher prices for commodities produced by good farming practice, the Government of Southern Rhodesia proposes to pay a bonus of 4d. per lb. for first-grade butterfat, 2d. for second-grade, and a 1d. a gallon for milk converted into first-grade cheese, provided that the milk is from cows registered under a Government scheme. One condition of registration is that 25% of the cows must have produced at least 150 lbs. of butterfat in 300 days, and it is notified that this output figure will be raised to 175 lbs. next year and 200 lbs. two years later.

Questions in Parliament

Colonies at Prime Minister's Meetings

Major Lyons asked the Prime Minister whether he was satisfied that at the forthcoming meetings of the Dominion Prime Ministers, the Colonies would be adequately represented in all matters which might be raised affecting their present and future political, social, and economic well-being. What representations would be made and whether he would ensure that every care would be taken that no殖民地 matter be introduced without prior discussion in the appropriate Colonial legislative assemblies for consideration.

The Prime Minister : " It is natural that the Secretary of State for the Colonies should be present when any question which may affect the Colonial Empire comes up for discussion, and also at other times. I can assure my hon. friend that while the interests of the Colonial Empire will be vigilantly watched, I could not submit to such a sweeping inhibition as he proposes."

Mr. Attlee : " Are we to understand that no representatives of the colonies will be present in England at these meetings ? "

The Prime Minister : " No, sir. Sir Godfrey Huggins is at present representing Southern Rhodesia. That is not incompatible with representation of the Colonies, but otherwise the colonies are represented by the Secretary of State."

Empire Migration

Major Lyons asked the Prime Minister whether the question of migration within the Empire would form a subject for discussion at the meetings of Dominion Prime Ministers.

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Attlee) : " It is hoped that opportunity will offer at the forthcoming meetings with Dominion Prime Ministers for a general discussion on the question of migration."

Captain Longhurst asked the Minister of Information whether he would consider reprinting the complete Official Report covering the recent debate on Empire affairs and distributing copies free of charge on a generous scale to the Dominions and Colonies.

Mr. Bracken : " This debate has been very fully reported in the Press and on the radio in all parts of the Empire. So the production of a special pamphlet by the Ministry of Information would be superfluous."

Mr. Shinwell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the terms of the experts' agreement on an International Currency Fund precluded Great Britain entering into separate currency arrangements with any of the Dominions.

Sir John Anderson : " I assume that my hon. friend is referring to the sterling area arrangements. There is nothing in the proposed scheme to preclude their continuance."

Mr. Morgan asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether Asiatic immigration into East Africa was now suspended owing to the local food shortage, and how many Asiatics had been admitted since September, 1939.

Colonel Stanley : " Immigration restrictions have recently been imposed in Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika. They are purely temporary, and apply equally to all non-Natives without discrimination. They were rendered necessary by the acute shortage of housing and other accommodation due to war-time increases in the urban populations, which have also affected the local food position. Figures are not available, but I will obtain them from the Governments concerned and communicate with my hon. friend."

Major Lyons asked the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he was aware of disquiet at the military arrangements for discharge or demobilization of combatants or non-combatant enlisted Africans from Bechuanaland, Basutoland and Swaziland who have served overseas; and whether he would arrange, in conjunction with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, for a review of the whole position of discharged Africans in regard to their terms of discharge and demobilization to embrace leave and pay and allowances on passage, war gratuities, arrangements for re-employment and re-orientation, pensions for disablement, including those for widows and children, etc., on more generous lines.

Mr. Entry-Evans : " My noble friend has not heard of any dispute such as this having arisen. The question arises. Most of the points you have mentioned are already under active consideration by the Department of State and Colonial Office. Schemes for rehabilitation and re-employment can be worked out only by the authorities concerned who are already engaged on this task. As regards rehabilitation, I would refer to the policy outlined in the reply given by my right honourable and gallant member by the Secretary of State for the Colonies on March 15, which is also being followed in respect of the High Commission Territories."

Mr. Edmund Harvey asked if the Minister would take steps to secure that in all concessions for the working of minerals, provision should be made to ensure the terms of the International Labour Treaty.

Colonel Stanley : " The practice in the Colonial Empire is to insert a clause in the terms of International Labour Conventions by the Government or legislation in the Colony to which they have been applied and not by the insertion of special conditions in individual contracts."

Dr. Morgan : " Would not the insertion of the conditions in the individual contract help the individual worker to realize that something is being done to educate him for his position ? "

Colonel Stanley : " The hon. member suggested that it should be in the contract with the companies. I think the men would be much more likely to realize their rights by learning through legislation passed in the Colony."

Uganda Textile Plan Postponed

Mr. Sorensen asked the Minister to make a statement respecting the development of the cotton-spinning and weaving industry in Uganda.

Colonel Stanley : " The East African authorities have for some time been considering the establishment of a textile plant, possibly in Uganda, for the manufacture of cloth for local use by up-to-date means. It was proposed that this venture should be financed by a consortium of firms established in East Africa, with provision for African participation in shareholding. Owing to some improvement in textile supplies from overseas, it has been decided that it would be wiser now to defer the project for consideration as a post-war development."

Mr. Hutchinson asked the Secretary to the Treasury whether he would give instructions that M.P.s should be supplied upon application with a copy of the British Imperial Calendar and Civil Service List.

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Asheton) : " No, sir. Members are supplied, on application, with free copies of non-Parliamentary Government publications reasonably necessary for their Parliamentary work, but a free personal supply of official reference books has never been included, and I do not feel it would be justifiable, especially at this time, to vary the long-standing practice. This book is in the Library. We must limit the number of publications circulated."

African Progress in S. Rhodesia

Captain F. E. Harris's View of the Future

A picture of the future development of Native reserves in Southern Rhodesia was painted by the Minister of Agriculture and Defence when speaking at St. George's Hall, Bulawayo, on April 1. Referring to the Government's statement at the opening of parliament that a Commission of Enquiry was being appointed to investigate an aspect of the law that Captain Harris said he had been asked to consider, he said: "I hope that the Commission's work would be one of the first things to be done in Rhodesia when the attempt to bring about self-government will be made in each Native reserve there will be self-government under the chairmanship of a Native Commission, and the chair will be elected and members of the Native people. They will be on a co-operative basis with all goods which the Natives produce and require. These boards will be linked together under a Federated Cooperative Society with one Chief Native Commissioner as chairman."

As a result of the work of these boards Captain Harris said there would be modern Native towns in each reserve, with simple, electric, "sanitation" and several houses of such Africans and their families in each reserve, including grain storage bins, grain mills, side-chaining threshing buildings for other industries, houses, churches, hospital clinics, post office and government post-halls, schools, etc., all built and owned by the Native, with the help of the Government.

Each one of these "Native units of development" these towns would be connected with the towns and roads by main roads. Communication and transport would interest the Natives in what would be known in the different reserves, and seats would be provided. When this is brought about we shall have really uplifted the Native and get him to take a active place in the economic life of the Colony."

Educating African Girls

Of the 6,000 African girls in Uganda completed a full primary school before 1937, more than 500 did so last year, when 120 were also enrolled in secondary classes, 52 in post-primary vocational classes, and 865 in teacher-training classes.

U.K. Commercial Corporation

Directors and Their Other Interests

The Chancellor of the Exchequer recently gave the House of Commons a list of the directors of the United Kingdom Corporation and a statement of the other directorships held by each.

Sir Francis Baring, the Acting Chairman, who visited Rhodesia some years ago, is the director of the Rio Tinto Company which has large interests in Northern Rhodesian copper mining, and 16 other companies.

Mr. C. Chester Beatty is a director of Matlins Copper Mines, Roan Antelope, and the British African Selection Trust, Consolidated African Selection Trust, General Colliery and other companies.

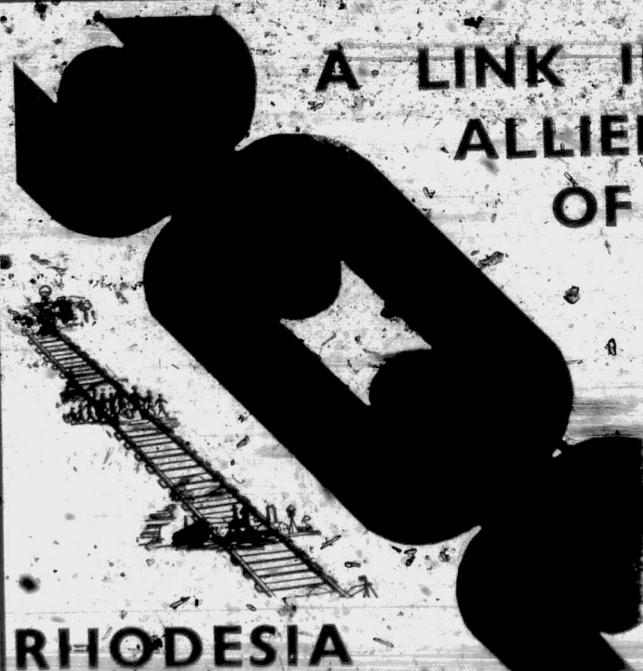

Sir Frank Nixon is a director of the Rhodesian Diamond registered by the U.K.C.C., including those in East Africa, Malaya, Ethiopia and Eritrea. Mr. J. H. Lambro is on the board of the same 11 subsidiaries and two other companies.

Mr. G. A. McEwen is a director of the Co-operative Wholesale Society and two other companies. Mr. C. P. Lister is on the board of three companies. Mr. L. Paton of eight; Captain L. J. Leighton of 10; Mr. E. J. Shearer of two; Mr. G. G. Campbell of six; and Mr. J. H. Lambro of 11.

Axoxide from Sisal Waste

In a broadcast to East Africa on May 1, Major Conrad Wyllie spoke of the water-soluble extract known as Axoxide, obtained from the sisal flesh either before or after extraction of the wax. Axoxide contains sugar, glucosides and proteins, and can be used as an anti-corrosive mixture on such metals as duralumin, aluminum and zinc; for the "pickling" of steel; as an ingredient in certain synthetic glues; as a coagulator of rubber latex; as a foaming agent in fire-extinguishing mixtures; and for the prevention of rusting in pipes. The extract may also be sold in small alcohol on a commercial scale. The residual flesh remaining after all the processing operations have been carried out is usable for the manufacture of ordinary and insulating boards for factory and household use.

RHODESIA RAILWAYS

Ltd., Englemead Hill, Ascot, Berkshire, England

Troops, war equipment, tools, and thousands of tons of raw materials essential to the Allied war effort pass daily over the Rhodesian railway system.

War-time conditions have not made it easy to handle this greatly increased volume of traffic, but difficulties have been overcome, and the Rhodesian Railways continue to form one of the important links which hold together the great chain of war supplies.

News It Is in Brief

The Colonial Film Unit has made 80 films since the outbreak of war.

Dalgety and Co., Ltd., announce an interim ordinary dividend of 21% (the same).

Dar es Salaam has a third cinema, built, owned and managed by Indian interests.

Colonial Welfare Committee on the Colonies is preparing a pamphlet on early marriage.

Nyasaland's estimated revenue for 1944 is £939,261 and the estimated expenditure £887,781. Income tax, Native tax and customs duty are estimated to produce 77% of the revenue.

The Bishop of Central Tanganyika recently conducted a service at the investiture of the new chief of staff, whose father would not have a missionary in his country 40 years ago.

A trade union expert from Great Britain is to advise the Labour Department of Mauritius, where a Labour Council representative of employers and workmen is likely to be established.

The Empire Cotton Growers' Corporation, which has decided to transfer its cotton research station from Trinidad to Uganda, is already considering the acquisition of the necessary land.

Kenya has now five mobile Post Office Savings Banks for up-country districts. African staff are being trained for these vans. Contact with headquarters is to be maintained by radio.

All the occupants of a Lockheed aircraft of the Det. Air Services at Mozambique—six passengers and the crew of three—were killed when it crashed in flames two miles from Quelimane aerodrome.

The Lands and Mines Department of Tanganyika is producing 2,000 tonnes weekly in a factory in Dodoma.

The Sudan Government has provided a touring camel-carried shop for isolated districts in the south of the Kassala Province. Cotton piecegoods, tea, sugar, matches and paraffin are in most active demand.

The Kenya and Uganda Railways have recently been carrying some 2,500,000 passengers annually in addition to those transported by military and other special trains. Before the war the total was well under 1,000,000 a year.

The payments from the civil aviation fund to the difference between the cash budget figure and revenue of British Overseas Airways Corporation were £1,835,146 in 1940-41, £1,720,286 in 1941-42, £1,052,573 in 1942-43 and £1,1686 in 1943-44.

The flue-cured tobacco crop in Southern Rhodesia is expected to be about 34,000,000 lb. this season, but since there has been a partial failure of the crop in the Union, the South African crop in Southern Rhodesia will be much larger, though reducing the quality, which would stand well in the available foreign tobacco markets.

In pre-war days the two centre pages of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA carried the heading "Background to the News," which on the outbreak of war was changed to "Background to the War News." The London weekly News Review now uses "Background to the News" as the heading for its first page.

The Ethiopian Government has opened a public wireless service from Addis Ababa to Khartoum under the name ETP. It is operated entirely by Ethiopian personnel. The traffic, which at present averages about 1,500 words daily, had previously been handled by a station operating under British frequencies and call signs.

COMPANY MEETING

British South Africa CompanySir Dougal Malcolm's Statement

THE FORTY-SIXTH ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING OF THE BRITISH SOUTH AFRICA COMPANY was held on Thursday last at 11 Old Jewry, London, E.C.

SIR DOUGAL O. MALCOLM, B.C.M., the President of the company, was in the chair.

The Secretary, Mr. Peter C. P. A. C. P. A. C., having read the notices calling the meeting and the report of the auditors,

The Chairman said:

"Gentlemen, we meet to consider the report and accounts for the year ended December 31, 1943, which I hope you will agree with me in thinking has been another quite good year. Our profit for the year is £17,000 less than the profit for the year before, although we have had to provide more than £50,000 more for taxation purposes, as against £82,000. This is, of course, quite beyond our control. In other respects we have done better than the year before by nearly £50,000."

Railway and Mining Revenue

"Dividends and interest at £17,000 are a little under £5,000 less than in the year before. You will remember that when I spoke to you last year I warned you that we could not expect a recurrence of that year's exceptionally large dividend from the Rhodesia Railways Trust, which was due to its exceptional receipt of two dividends of £125,000 instead of one from Rhodesia Railways, Limited. In the year under review Rhodesia Railways Trust, of course, received only the normal one dividend from Rhodesia Railways, Limited, so that for its year ended March 31, 1943, the Trust paid a dividend of 12%, as against a dividend of 16% for its year ended March 31, 1942. The diminution in the Rhodesia Railways Trust dividend is almost made up for increases in other dividends.

"Our mining revenue at £812,000 is better than in the year before by about £22,000 and though the profit on our estates at £19,745 is a little over £3,000 less than in the year before, it is nevertheless satisfactory and is due to much the same causes as before. Balance of profit on realization of investments less amounts written off at £16,000 is very nearly the same as in the year before."

"On the expenditure side there is a small diminution in general expenses just about balanced by a small increase in interest and further reserve created to staff superannuation reserve and provident fund account. The diminution of £2,000 in the profit carried to the balance-sheet is, as I have already said, more than all accounted for by the increase in the provision made for taxation.

Balance Sheet Items

The figures in the balance-sheet are so very close to those of last year that I do not think that I need trouble you by going through them in detail, and will only observe in connexion with our investments which stand in the balance-sheet at £8,963,955, including unquoted securities very conservatively valued by the directors at £628,000, that there is a large unrealized market appreciation on the quoted securities entered in the balance-sheet at £7,35,290.

One further observation may be of interest. We have decided at 11 Old Jewry to put the Rhodesia Land Bank into liquidation. Owing mainly to the pressure of taxation the bank has failed in recent years to pay very small dividends on the share capital of the bank, and it seems to us to be in your interest to set free the funds invested in it, although the bank for many years has had a successful career and we owe a real debt of gratitude to its local management. The bank's debentures have been redeemed and the accounts now before you are such that it is to which there will be a note in the balance-sheet about our contingent liability in respect of the company's guarantee of these debentures.

Strong Position

The net result is that, as the whole world continues to live in uncertain times, we think it prudent to recommend the same dividend and bonus as last year—viz., a dividend of 6½% of 1s. per unit of stock, and a bonus of 1½%, of 9d. per unit, and to increase our carry-forward from £718,404 to the impressive figure of £1,533,005. Set apart from the carry-forward our reserve account stands intact at over £3,200,000, you will agree, I think, that our position is strong.

I have again, as in past years, to express my grateful appreciation of the loyal and devoted services rendered to us by our staff alike in this country and in Rhodesia, and by the staffs of our railways and other associated companies through another difficult and anxious year.

The report and accounts were unanimously adopted and the dividend and bonus as recommended were approved.

The retiring directors, Colonel T. Ellis Robins, D.S.O., and Sir Ernest Oppenheimer, were re-elected and Messrs. Cooper Bros. and Co. were re-appointed auditors.

Rhodesia Railways' receipts for February were £518,027, making for the five months of the financial year £2,635,113, compared with £1,430,462 and £2,471,398 for the corresponding periods last year. The Beira Railway Company's receipts for the month were £73,170 and for the first five months £386,380, compared with £58,729 and £51,991.

COMPANY MEETING

The Uganda Company LimitedSir Theodore Chambers's Statement

THE FORTY-FIRST ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING OF THE UGANDA COMPANY, LIMITED, IS TO BE HELD AT NOON TODAY, MAY 4, AT THE REGISTERED OFFICES OF THE COMPANY, PORTICO HOUSE, 155 MINORIES, LONDON, E.C.3.

SIR THEODORE CHAMBERS, K.B.E., Chairman of the Company, will previously circulate the following statement to the shareholders with the annual report and accounts:

"The year under review has been a difficult one for Uganda, which, in common with other parts of East Africa, experienced a severe drought, resulting in an abnormally low cotton crop and reduced output of tea."

"In view of these circumstances, but in consequence of certain adventitious sources of income, we are able to show a profit of £53,365, as compared with £26,250 last year, before providing for taxation."

Balance Sheet.—There are no changes calling for particular comment. Adequate reserves have been maintained, and after the payment of a dividend of 20% less income tax at 18s. in the £, the carry-forward will be increased from £52,340 to £54,655. Depreciation has been provided on the usual scale and amortization to write off all lands and buildings on the expiry of our leases.

Cotton.—Unsettled marketing conditions in the previous year discouraged early planting and the drought adversely affected the whole crop, particularly the later plantings. As a result the crop was only 110,000 bales, the smallest for 15 years.

"Our cotton interests are now limited to the Mengo-Entebbe districts, where we own seven ginneries, but in this year operated only five. We ginned our share of the small crop, but this meant only 4,789 bales, as compared with 9,766 bales in 1942. As most of our charges are fixed, the expenses per bale rose sharply, and our profit from ginning was about a third of that earned in the previous year. Fortunately the cotton department enjoyed some exceptional miscellaneous income, so the final result was a reduction of only £871 in its profits.

Bold Experiment in Government Control

"This year we have witnessed a bold and beneficent experiment in Government control. On previous occasions I have mentioned the unsettled state of the Uganda cotton trade and the steps Government were compelled to take to ensure orderly marketing and reasonable prices. Such steps were temporary expedients to overcome pressing difficulties, but now the Uganda Government, in co-operation with the Ministry of Supply, has fixed prices for the purchase of cotton from growers and ginners for the duration of the war and one year after. All cotton ginned is referred to the Cotton Exporters' Board, which, operating on behalf of Government, meets the Ministry of Supply requirements at the agreed price and takes any surplus to other markets. The profits arising from the scheme are to Government account and will be used for the benefit of the cotton industry and the cotton area."

"In 1942 the growers got an average of 6.80 shillings a price which discouraged planting for 1943, when the price was fixed at 14s. Without this scheme the price of cotton might have been higher, but the grower would have been tempted to use his larger income in trying to acquire a strictly limited amount of consumable goods. The result would in all probability have been no substantial benefit to the grower, and the sowing of the seeds of future discontent would have been.

"We welcome the scheme as it is equitable to all parties, insures orderly marketing, a definite future price to the grower, and retains in Government's hands temporary profits which in the hands of individuals could bring no lasting advantage to them or to the community. Wisely used, the fund now being accumulated may have far-reaching results on the future welfare and prosperity of Uganda."

"During the year we acted as Government agents for the marketing of soya beans, and handled 1,000 tons.

Tea.—Our estate was adversely affected by the prevailing drought, rainfall being 84 inches, against 46 in the previous year. Our production was reduced from 377,785 lb. in 1942 to 170,000 lb., and the yield per acre from 937 lb. to 871 lb. Five factors had therefore to be borne by a smaller crop, with the result that costs increased and our profits fell.

Effect of Drought on Tea Estate

"Energetic steps were taken to maintain and improve the condition of the bushes by pruning and manuring, but it may be some time before the estate recovers from the prolonged drought, which has continued into the current year."

"On the factory we have spent £1,000 on maintenance and improvements, and we are now equipped to deal with the substantially larger crop which may be anticipated in the near future."

"The welfare of our labour continues to engage the close attention of our estate manager, and by growing food crops on the estate we have substantially mitigated for the labour the effects of the drought and scarcity of foodstuffs."

"We continued to manage Uganda Tea Sales, Limited, and shared with the other members a higher unit price for all tea sold."

Agency Business.—Contrary to our expectations this department showed a small increase in profit over last year. This excellent result is due to the enthusiasm and efficiency of our motor department staff, generous provision in the pay for stock depreciation and bad debts, and the good name we enjoy for a high standard of repair work, which is more than ever an essential service."

Prospects.—The current year's results, particularly tea, will be adversely affected by the drought, which persists. The cotton crop is larger than last year and we may hope to benefit from this, but miscellaneous income is likely to be lower. If nothing improves happens, we may expect our agency results to deteriorate this year's."

"I must bear tribute to the enthusiasm and zeal which have been shown by the general manager, Mr. Dakin, and his staff, who have carried on so efficiently and loyally in most difficult times in spite of the lack of home leave and the imperative demands which co-operation with various Governmental agencies makes on his own and his senior colleague's time and attention. The board acknowledge their warm appreciation of the devoted services of the Uganda staff."

Local Government in the Sudan

enthusiastic. Never for an instant did they falter or yield to fear or bribery, even when they found the enemy's hands. Never did they fail to carry out the many unpopular and uncustomed policies that the military situation demanded. Their conduct is the perfect justification of the policy of local government.

The latest development in self-government is the creation this year of a Central Advisory Council for the Sudan. The members of this council will be elected from the various provincial councils or nominally elected by the public. It has not yet been decided whether the members will represent representatives of special interests. The Sudan government has, of course, been building up the institutions in the hope of turning out citizens trained whether politically or administratively in the art of government.

What of the political future? The end of the road to self-government, on which the northern Sudan is well advanced, is obscured by two factors—the great disparity in the rate of progress between the north and the south, and the complete absence of a party with a programme long held up through difficult circumstances out of the mud of expediency, centred in favour of the principle of full self-governed nation which she has claimed. It gave Great Britain an alliance which has been claimed to have been in this war even though the other party was a small and belligerent. But what has happened?

The primary aim of the administration of the Sudan must be the welfare of the Sudanese. It merely facilitates that this administration should be that resulting from the 1899 agreements. Lord Cromer, the author of the condominium agreement, recognized that the new Sudan was "of necessity to some extent the child of opportunism. Should it eventually die," he wrote, "and make place for some more robust, because more real political creature, its authors need not bewail its fate."

The Sudan, not technically a part of the British Empire, and quarrelling for none of the economic and material advantages of Colonial status, has stood as a loyalty for 45 years to its British connexion as any other Empire, and it has played a worthy part as a belligerent in this war. It may not be long before it reaches a stage of political development when the limitations of its condominium status will necessitate constitutional alteration. When that time comes it must be for the Sudan to dominus to ensure that the claim for self-determination successfully advanced by Egypt in her own interest is made equally applicable to the Sudan.

LATEST MINING NEWS

Gold Mining in S. Rhodesia

Concern at the decline of the gold-mining industry in Southern Rhodesia was expressed by the President of the Rhodesian Chamber of Mines, Major Ewan Tulloch, when he addressed the annual meeting of the Chamber in Bulawayo last week.

Major Tulloch urged that the mines should be paid the full price for gold per fine ounce in order to offset the increased costs of mining owing to war conditions, and urged the establishment of a commission representing the Mines Department, the Chamber of Mines, and the mining industry for consideration.

Major Tulloch, the minister of mines of Rhodesia, said that war development had increased the basic price of gold to a very poor figure and insufficient to meet the cost of the industry.

The output of gold for 1943 has been declared at 656,684 oz., a fall of 16,000 oz., which is 2.35% decrease on 1942, with the previous year and a fall of nearly 15% from 1941, an average 5.1% drop between 1911 and 1942. Although the decrease is partly due to shortage of supplies and the increase in working costs, the Chamber is convinced that principally due to the Government's insistence on maintaining the full price for gold, which has been maintained since 1911 in spite of a fall in 1943, the miners decline to work the mines producing under 500 oz. per annum.

The miners' output of gold in 1943 was 600,000 oz., showing a drop in output of 40,746 oz., while the mines producing over 10,000 oz. showed a reduction of 32,603 oz.

If the mines received the full price for gold, and if the anticipated improvement in the supply position came about, the larger producers should be able to maintain, if not improve, output, while the smaller mines could be re-opened.

The number of Europeans employed in the mining industry showed a reduction of 122, mainly owing to the closing of small properties. The number of Natives employed in the industry as a whole was 78,589, which was 3,273 fewer than in 1942, and 1,000 fewer forwards.

Major Tulloch paid tribute to all mining employees in the manner in which they had worked to keep up the mineral production thus materially assisting the war effort of the Colony.

Speaking later, the recently appointed Minister of Mines, Mr. B. B. Sedgley, agreed with Major Tulloch's suggestion for the appointment of a commission to assist the industry.

"I inclined right now," he said, "to promise to appoint such a commission, but since Parliament is now discussing the Budget I think it would be unwise to commit the Government at the moment. But I certainly do promise seriously to consider your proposals within the next few days."

Company Progress Reports

KENYA.—March output totalled 20 tons of tin concentrate, including 2 tons from tributaries.

Kenya Gold Areas.—During the nine months ended March 31 last 60,130 long tons of ore were treated at the Geita mine for a recovery of 22.55 fine oz. gold at an average cost before depreciation of $2.16s. per ton. Milling operations were governed by the supplies of essential stores and native labour available, and averaged only 219 tons per day, as compared with 236 tons per day for the corresponding period last year. The drop in gold output was caused mainly by the suspension of high-grade ore supplies from the Mawie Mera mine owing to difficulties in maintaining road transport. No further information is available with regard to the high-grade ore exposed in the crosscut on No. 7 level at the Geita mine, as driving cannot be begun until the installation of the motor for the internal shaft head. This machinery was lost at sea one two occasions, and the replacement motor has only recently been shipped.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

A JOINT STANDING COLONIAL COMMITTEE of both Houses of Parliament has been advocated from various quarters for some years, but the proposal has never received a warm welcome

Parliament and The Colonies. from the Secretary of State of the day. Because there is very evident need for a better understanding of Colonial policy and problems in Parliament, a correspondent re-states in this issue of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA the case for such a Joint Standing Committee, and shows the weakness of the objections which have been advanced. The chief advantages would in his opinion be two-fold: (1) to stimulate action by the Colonial Office and check its bureaucratic tendencies, and (2) to show Colonial peoples that an informed body in Parliament was supervising their welfare. It has to be recognized, however, that in the early stages at any rate such a Joint Committee might not be nearly as well informed as the Colonies would wish, for some of the men in both Houses who are most eager to participate in Colonial debates, who in the Lower House are persistent questioners of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and who would presumably be keen to serve on the proposed new body, have frequently revealed their ignorance of the real facts. Some, in fact, have made it evident that they are moved by preconceptions, and sometimes misconceptions, which they decline to modify or abandon, even when their errors have been demonstrated by other Parliamentary speakers or by Press comment.

For these reasons a Joint Colonial Committee might make some disappointing initial mistakes, but its members would, it is to be assumed, gradually develop a greater sense of responsibility as

If a Joint Colonial Committee Were Formed. they fulfilled the continuing duty of studying documents about the Colonies, and as they had the novel experience of finding their own opinions challenged across the table by more knowledgeable fellow-members. That in itself would be a considerable gain. Another advantage, as we see the proposal, is that day-to-day co-operation between members of all the political parties in such a body for the study of Colonial business would tend to weaken the temptation to which public men are understandably prone of approaching Colonial problems from a party standpoint. In this direction the war has already exercised a beneficial influence; indeed, some former Parliamentary critics have suddenly ranged themselves among the emotional expositors of the essential values of the Empire.

At last they realize that the loyalty to the Crown of the Dominions and Colonies is so vital and vigorous that it cannot be easily muted into that cold, doctrinaire idealism in which they had professed such simple faith.

Having written thus far we received information that the Conservative Party had decided to create a department to deal with Colonial affairs at party headquarters, and had appointed a 'Colonial news. But it is a sad reflection on a party which has professed devotion to the Overseas Empire that it should have been content to remain without ordered information on Colonial matters until almost the middle of the twentieth century. The dangers of that deficiency have often been revealed, and never more flagrantly and frighteningly than during the inter-war years of appeasement, when a few Conservative stalwarts, steeled by their sense of duty against the displeasure of vindictive Ministers and whips, insisted on enacting at each party conference resolutions against the surrender of Colonial territories to predatory Germany which was openly preparing for another attempt at world domination. If the party had been properly informed on Colonial matters, its leaders would not have dared to treat this vital British interest with such levity, and the whole body of Conservative thought would have given the country much sounder guidance and British Colonial Africa much less anxiety. Now this need for up-to-date knowledge of Colonial aims and claims is to be met, and we are glad to note by the appointment of a man with experience in East and Central Africa. The choice has fallen upon Mr. Gerald Lacy, who is well remembered in Tanganyika Territory and Nyasaland in particular. He will enter upon his responsible and attractive new duties with the good will and best wishes of all friends of Colonial progress. The Labour Party has long been actively, if often unsuccessfully, interested in Colonial subjects, and it is satisfactory that the Conservative Party should at last appreciate the need for systematic and informed guidance.

Joint Standing Colonial Committee of Parliament

The Proposal Examined by a Student of Colonial Affairs

THE COLONIAL OFFICE is responsible for the administration of the British Colonies and Protectorates, and the Secretary of State for the Colonies is accountable to Parliament for that administration. That is the only link between the Colonies and Parliament.

The 60-odd million people in the Colonies are not represented in Parliament, and few M.P.s. manifest interest in Colonial affairs by questions, by personal consultations and correspondence with Ministers, and by debate when Colonial policy occasionally comes before the House. But the House of Commons gives only two or three sittings a year to debates on Colonial policy. The House of Lords has useful debates on the Colonies more often, but exercises less authority than the Commons. Colonial policy is in fact left to the Colonial Office and is subject to all of the defects which characterize government by a bureaucracy. It is an open secret that the permanent officials of the Colonial Office have played a greater part in moulding Colonial policy than some Colonial Ministers.

Criticisms of the Proposed Committee

With a view to disturbing the existing indifference and complacency at Westminster, it has been suggested that the Colonies should be granted representation in Parliament. Some authorities doubt whether there is a place for such a change in the British Constitution, and the proposal has met with little support in this country. There is, however, widespread feeling that there should be a closer link between the British people in the Mother Countries and in the administration of the Colonial peoples, since they are responsible, and that responsible can only be established only through Parliament.

A suggestion which has met with wider acceptance is that a Standing Parliamentary Committee on Colonial Affairs of both Houses of Parliament should be established. The idea was advanced by Lord Hailey in 'An African Survey' in 1938 (page xxvii). He wrote:

'The disturbances which occurred in one of the West Indian Colonies gave occasion for some public discussion regarding the adequacy of the organization of the Colonial Office for the direction of Colonial policy in modern conditions. It was suggested that there is little evidence of a central direction of major lines of policy. . . . The only body best suited to fulfil the function indicated appears to be a Standing Committee of the Houses of Parliament, specifically charged to report periodically on the affairs of each Colony or Protectorate, on the basis of the official reports or any other public material brought to its notice. Such a body might also, following the procedure of the Permanent Mandates Commission, examine representatives nominated by the Colonial Office to explain matters arising out of the reports.'

On June 7 and 12, 1939, the Prime Minister was asked questions arising out of Lord Hailey's suggestion, and he promised to examine it, but the war resulted in it being shelved. The case for it was well argued by Lord Samuel in the House of Lords on November 26, 1941, and again on May 1, 1942, and January 26, 1944, and in the Commons by Mr. Creech Jones, Mr. Maxton and Mr. Edmund Harvey on June 24 and November 26, 1942. On each occasion Government spokesmen expressed opposition to the idea.

The main purpose of the proposed committee would be to stimulate the interest of a greater number of members of both Houses in Colonial affairs, and to collect accurate information on Colonial problems and present it to Parliament and the public in published reports. It would also provide people in the Colonies with a forum in which they could address their grievances with the evidence supporting them, assured that they would be investigated and that, if substantiated, they would be considered before the authority empowered to redress them. The following criticisms have been made:

Committee at Westminster

(1) That a Committee of both Houses would have no precedent and would cut across constitutional practice.

It is not denied that it would have no precedent. There have been other joint committees. The most important committee appointed in recent times to deal with an African question was recruited from both Houses. It is true that the British Constitution is not sufficiently flexible to meet an innovation, if this would be an innovation which it is submitted, it would not be.

While there might be objection in principle to a joint body invested with executive powers because of divided responsibility, that does not apply to an advisory body. The great advantage of including members of the House of Lords is that it would enable the Colonial people to have some kind of representation on these committees, for in recent years such authority on Colonial questions as Louis Nogard, Oliver Samuelson, Harvey, have given rise to the proposal.

It has been said that inclusion of peers might give the Committee a bias in the correspondence of Conservatives. Equally, however, nomination to the Committee from both Houses would be made in proportion to the parties in the House of Commons or to the votes cast at the preceding general election.

A Stimulus to The Colonial Office

(2) That it would diminish the authority of the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The duty of the Committee would be to investigate and recommend to Parliament what would be purely advisory and would not overlap with the Executive. The Secretary of State would be accountable not to the Committee, but to Parliament as a whole, and he himself not be a member of the Committee.

The existence of such a committee and its inquiries would be a stimulus to the Colonial Office and would check that dilatoriness and lack of initiative which so often affect the Civil Service. The knowledge that a Colony might be visited by a Parliamentary sub-committee, which would publish a report on its findings, would help to keep Colonial administrations alert. Any one familiar with the history of annual scrutiny by the Permanent Mandates Commission of the administration of a Mandated Territory would bear witness to that.

Contacts between members of a visiting Parliamentary sub-committee and people in the Colonies would assist the growth of local self-governing institutions. It would enable members of the sub-committee to get first-hand knowledge of Colonial conditions and to promote constructive reforms.

Authority of Governors

(3) That the visits of Parliamentary sub-committees would undermine the authority of the Colonial Governors.

Visits to Colonies have been made by M.P.s on behalf of the Empire Parliamentary Association. Of late the Secretary of State has been sending a high official of the Colonial Office to tour the Colonies, investigate problems on the spot, and afford the facility of direct consultation between the Colonial Office and the Governors. In the West African Colonies there is now a Resident Minister of State, whose appointment was officially described as "administrative rather than political". If the presence of these high placed persons, mostly connected with the Executive, has not weakened the power and prestige of Colonial Governors, still less could visits by a Parliamentary sub-committee responsible to a purely advisory body.

(4) That the Joint Parliamentary Committee would duplicate the work of the several Advisory Committees which investigate and advise the Secretary of State.

This is perhaps true. But the committees advisory to the Secretary of State advise him, not Parliament. They seldom issue reports and their deliberations are not known to M.P.s. There is need for both.

(5) That debate on Colonial questions would tend to be confined to those members of Parliament who are members of the Joint Committee.

That might happen, but if it did, the number speakers on Colonial affairs would probably be greater and they would be better informed than at present, and might be more effective in shaping policy. It would not preclude the less learned from speaking if they wished.

Alternatives Suggested

The following alternatives to the suggestion have been discussed:

(1) That a Colonial Development Board should be set up.

This would not be linked with Parliament and would be under the authority of the committee's advisory to the Secretary of State. However, a Government Board could not deal with general policy of a non-parliamentary nature to the same extent as a Parliamentary Committee. An advisory board is little likely to promote Colonial development. The Colonial Office is crowded with the reports of Committees whose advice remains shelved. The organ needed would be a Colonial Development Authority invested with executive power to initiate development.

(2) That a semi-official all-party committee should be set up by the voluntary action of Members of Parliament interested in Colonial affairs.

This committee could never have the weight of an officially constituted Joint Parliamentary Committee, and it would not have the means to employ the staff required to sift and present to the Committee the information which should be collected from the Colonies and published for the information of M.P.s and the public.

(3) That the present practice of sending Royal Commissions or Departmental Committees to examine particular questions should be adhered to.

These inquiries are instituted after incidents have accumulated and festered, and perhaps given rise to riots. It would be better to send a Parliamentary Committee to a Colony in the normal course every few years in order to prevent things going wrong—just as preventive medicine is better than curative medicine. Furthermore, such inquiries in the Colonies would act as a restraint on irresponsible and unjustified criticism, for if local politicians knew that some authoritative body would examine their allegations, they would be all the more careful about their facts.

Better Parliamentary Supervision Needed

The need for better Parliamentary supervision of Colonial administration is generally recognized. In the words of the Fabian pamphlet on "Downing Street and the Colonies" (page 95):

"A Standing Committee of both Houses of Parliament would be able to advise Parliament on general direction of Colonial policy and periodically review progress in each Colony and report to Parliament. Its terms of reference would need to infringe in no way the ultimate responsibility of the Secretary of State and the collective responsibility of the Government."

It would report on Colonial Reports and other public material brought to its notice. It might examine officials of the Colonial Office and members of the Committee in the discharge of their duties would, as occasion arose, visit the territories in order to familiarize themselves with some of the aspects of the problems with which they are required to deal. Such a Committee should invite visitors to this country from the Colonies capable of giving valuable information on matters of major importance.

The active work of such a Joint Committee would be a healthy check on bureaucratic tendencies in administration; would stimulate action by the Colonial Office; and would give Colonial peoples the assurance that an informed body in Parliament was supervising their welfare.

Problems of Nutrition in The Colonial Empire

THAT MALNUTRITION is widespread in the Colonies and that it results in lowered resistance to infection, in unduly high maternal and infant mortality, in inefficiency of labour in agriculture, mining and industry, and of general lack of well-being—all this is much more generally understood today than it was five or ten years ago.

The science of nutrition is still young and much has yet to be learnt. The problems can, moreover, seldom be solved in isolation, as they are almost uniformly complicated by tradition, ignorance and the deadweight of conservatism, and action involves the agencies of public health, agriculture, education, animal health, economics, labour and so on.

In view of the magnitude of the problems of malnutrition, there is much to be said for keeping them under public notice, and 'Hunger and Health' in the Colonies, published by the Colonial Fabrik Bureau at £1, is therefore to be welcomed.

This 33 page pamphlet affirms that there was an unbroken lack of drive, purpose and continuity on the part of the Colonial Nutrition Committee, and in the Colonies before the war, and that in some areas the administration, feeling the revelations, which detailed nutrition surveys might make would reflect adversely on its own food policy, withheld their full support; even the nutrition committee existed. Such reluctance should not be allowed to continue. The work of nutritional inquiries is, in every case he published, so that there shall be no justification for the suspicions which are now sometimes expressed in reports of too revealing a nature are deliberately refused publication.

The report also states:

Inadequate Organization in The Colonial Office

"The Colonial Office Nutrition Committee has ceased to exist. Dr. B. S. Platt, of the Medical Research Council, continues to advise the Colonial Office, but it is understood that he has largely been engaged on other work. In 1941 one appointment was made, when the position of nutrition assistant was created. That is the sole specific provision at the moment for dealing with the vast and intricate nutrition problems throughout the Colonial Empire."

"This set-up is hopelessly inadequate. The Colonial Office Nutrition Committee ought to be revived immediately and an adequate staff provided for collecting information, watching changes and progress in the separate Dependencies, stimulating action, and generally surveying, with expert knowledge the whole field of the Colonial Empire. The obligation undertaken by His Majesty's Government to give effect to the resolutions of the Hot Springs Conference and commend them to the Colonies would alone suggest that a minimum of advisory and permanent machinery should be recreated inside the Colonial Office."

Nutrition Committees in the Colonies should be essentially mixed committees, fully representative of scientists, economists, agricultural experts, consumers, teachers and administrators. With such a committee an approach to nutrition from all its different angles would become possible. No rigid doctrine was laid down on the constitution and functions of the committees, which must of necessity vary with the traditions of each country. There was, however, one essential condition—that they should be incorporated in the State administrative organization. A national committee that depends entirely on private initiative for its driving power and its finances, as some do, is undoubtedly not in a position to perform its functions satisfactorily. On the other hand, national committees are likely to be greatly strengthened by the addition of members who are not Ministers or State officials.

The Colonial Nutrition Committee stressed the importance of many-sidedness in the approach to nutrition problems, arguing that the primary responsibility rests with the Medical and Health Departments, but that the Agricultural and Veterinary Departments also had a most important part to play. The more specialized departments, moreover, will not be likely to achieve their full effect unless they receive the support and co-operation of the Administrative Service. Ultimately it is the central organs of Government which determine agricultural, health and education policy and allocate funds between the departments, and it is for them to bear in mind throughout the importance of the nutritional factor. Also the central organs must co-ordinate and balance the activities of the special departments.

Recognizing the importance of this coordination, the Secretary of State in his dispatch of 1938 suggested that in each territory a Nutrition Committee should be established, composed of representatives of each of the departments concerned. If most territories such a Committee was constituted, but they have rarely worked with the drive and coherence which was hoped of them.

Over 20 Colonies have appointed nutrition committees. Many of these appear, however, to be defunct or in abeyance, or are working only half-heartedly. There should be a whole-hearted resumption of their activities and new committees formed in Colonies where they are not yet existing. These Committees should be properly staffed, and a nutrition officer appointed to give effect to their decisions.

Nutrition Teams Needed in Each Colony

Co-ordinating committees sitting in the administrative capital of a Colony is not enough. There should also be nutrition committees or teams at provincial and district levels. Each of these teams should comprise agricultural, medical, educational and administrative staff. On these teams women should be represented of the utmost importance. The improvement of nutrition in the final analysis lies largely in the hands of women, and the approach to them can best be made by a woman expert.

While this long-term work is being put in hand, it may be expedient to act on an intermediate scale, and to ensure at least sufficient in both quantity and quality to meet the existing gross deficiencies. For example, an immediate increase in variety in the diet, even though the foods may not be the highest nutritive value, will go far to reduce the danger of deficiency.

Ideally, the present negligible consumption of milk, meat and eggs in the tropics should at once be expanded, but this may present a production problem of formidable difficulty and actually involve competition for food between animal and man. The Colonial peoples should not be asked to wait while these problems are being solved. There is much to be done meanwhile in expanding the production and consumption of other foods such as pulses, leafy vegetables, fish and fruit, all of which can be rapidly increased with the minimum of delay. Immediate progress could also be made in a direction which has been suggested innumerable times in reports on the colonial economy—the shift of emphasis from the production of cash crops to food crops for human consumption.

Also needing investigation are the possibilities of introducing green vegetables grown in other countries, such as Chinese cabbage, kalest, broccoli, lucerne, turnips, beetroot, lettuce, cauliflower, Brussels sprouts and new types of spinach. Their introduction would involve not only the supply of planting material at low cost, but also patient experiment and demonstration leading to the discovery of what varieties and what methods of preparation can most easily be popularized in any community.

More Fruit Should Be Grown

Contrary to popular opinion, there is not nearly enough tropical fruit, either in quantity or variety.

In the matter of fruit the tropical countries owe a great deal to the enterprise of the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew. It is more than a century since curators from these Gardens were first sent overseas, and it is through their activities that such fruits as mangoes and many of the citrus fruits were introduced to parts of the Colonial world. Almost all the old botanical gardens, so many of which have now virtually disappeared, were first planned and fostered by Kew, and it has been a great loss to mankind that that original idea has not been fully sustained and extended.

A great extension of fruit farming is now needed, especially in the neighbourhood of towns and schools, and in areas particularly affected by seasonality. Public spaces in some of the towns could be utilized for this purpose, and so could in many cases the 'stations' around which towns had their beginnings. In the villages any marked extension is bound up with questions of the permanence of village sites, as well as with difficulties arising from local beliefs regarding tree-planting. The question of protection from theft also cannot be overlooked, for in some areas predial larceny is one of the greatest deterrents to the extension of food production.

Many fruits are capable of much wider cultivation, among them South African peaches and apricots, mangoes (especially West Indian varieties), citrus, pawpaws, pineapples, and avocado pears.

There is a general shortage of protein and fat (animal and fish) in tropical diets, although it is very much easier to make a balanced diet if protein of animal origin is available.

Even in the cattle-producing areas, where meat and milk might be expected to be staple foods, these only rarely appear in the diet of the local people. Diseases such as trachoma, somiasis and water fever, induced by poverty and parasitic infestation make the absorption of protein in many parts. There are sometimes mineral abnormalities in the soil.

Conference of Empire Prime Ministers

THE CONFERENCE of the Prime Ministers of Great Britain, the Dominions, Southern Rhodesia, and India's representatives to the War Cabinet, has met frequently during the past week. The visiting statesmen have also attended meetings of the War Cabinet.

The speeches at the opening session of the Conference had been made public.

MRI. CHURCHILL said:

"I do not expect that we shall reach complete solutions to all the problems that confront the Empire at this time. We can however, do so in the next few days. But it is high time that we got round a table to exchange views and ideas. These ideas are I think convergent. But it should be our duty to seek to find where divergencies, or potential divergencies, exist and to see how such divergencies can be adjusted while they are still small. I am sure we shall do so in this friendly atmosphere."

It is right that the British Empire in its collective united aspect should put itself solidly in the map, and make all the world realize that it stands together, woven into a fabric of nations capable of solving our common problems in full loyalty to the war-time cause for which we have drawn the sword, and which we shall not cease to pursue until complete victory has been won."

Speeches of General Smuts and Sir Godfrey Huggins

GENERAL SMUTS said in the course of his reply:

"The old country, the old people, who have led the world and dominated human affairs for the last 100 years and more, with the younger nations from all the continents, are gathered here today around this table. The gathering is one unique in history because of the spiritual bonds that have held its members together as no group has ever been held before. Now in this great crisis we are held together in addition by a common danger, a mortal one, from which we have only just emerged. We are united too by the wider cause of man, for which we have stood during the last five years, and for much of it alone."

"Our group of nations is a composite. It has always had its message for the world. I hope that from this meeting and what emerges from it there will come forth a further message of deliverance and hope." This is more than a family or social group. This group is more than a British family. It is a human family of different races, as my presence here signifies. And so I am led to think of what has knit and will, I hope, for ever bind us together and make it a blessing not only for one racial front but for all mankind."

SIR GODFREY HUGGINS, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, said:

"I desire to associate myself with what has been said by the Dominion Prime Ministers in thanking the Prime Minister of Great Britain for inviting us to this meeting and for his cordial welcome. The small community that I represent is heart and soul with Great Britain in its difficulties. The gesture of inviting me to this meeting will be much appreciated by the smaller countries in the Commonwealth which have not yet reached the status of Dominions, and I desire sincerely to express my thanks."

SIR HIROZ KHAN NOOR said:

"There are no two opinions in India so far as the maintenance of ties with Great Britain and the prosecution of the war are concerned. There is no one in India, not even Mr. Gandhi himself, who does not want the United Nations to win. And there are no two opinions about the maintenance when the war is won, of India's connexion with Great Britain and with the other Dominions. For all time she will stand as an equal and free member of this community of nations, and she is gaining in political and economic stature all the time. If there are any differences of opinion between Great Britain and India, or between India and the Dominions, they are only such differences as occur from time to time between kith and kin. I am confident that these will be solved to the satisfaction of all parties. India looks forward to an equal and growing partnership in which she hopes to play her full part."

Press References to P.M. of S. Rhodesia

The presence at the Dominions Conference of Southern Rhodesia, the newest Dominion-to-be, is a token that freedom still broadens in the Commonwealth," wrote the Observer last Sunday, adding:

"The best domestic outcome of the Conference would be a bold and agreed programme of Colonial development. The King's Native policy, Britain puts European interests second, but South Africa and Southern Rhodesia differ. Yet the road to health and wealth for both Native and European is the increase of Colonial output and riches, earmarked first for Colonial use. Perhaps the Home and Dominion views can, be brought together in these talks, so that all the Colonies in their several ways may move very much more swiftly towards a decent living and self rule."

Sir Godfrey Huggins has been using Rhodesia House in the Strand as his business headquarters.

There have been many references to him in the Press.

The Times wrote:

"Sir Godfrey Huggins British born and trained, went as young surgeon to practise in Southern Rhodesia, entered politics there, and became a member of the private members' club of the Legislative Council into the Cabinet Ministry. He has always recognized that although Southern Rhodesia is a small territory in terms of white population, its importance in the scheme of African territories makes it a factor of the Empire. He was Minister of Health in 1933 and paid several visits here to report on the progress of his ministry and put forward his schemes of territorial groupings. He was here when war broke out and in March, 1943, he went to visit Rhodesian troops in the Middle East."

The Glasgow Herald said:

"One newspaper has remarked that the man who attended the conference whose mother was American. The statistician however, had forgotten Sir Godfrey Huggins, who is a son of Israel. This Baronet has not full Dominion status, and at the last Imperial Conference he was technically an observer, not a participant, a fact which led an irreverent journalist, aggrieved at the exclusion of the Press, to remark that there was no reporter but two observers—the Almighty and Huggins."

It is understood that the Prime Ministers have turned from military and foreign policy discussions to the consideration of economic policy within the Empire.

"Whitehall Executive" Proposed

Press paragraphs from Southern Rhodesia report that Mr. P. B. Fletcher, M.P., has proposed in Parliament that the Prime Minister should be asked to discuss with the War Office the possibility of "a Whitehall executive being established in Salisbury for South, Central and East Africa." There was a precedent, he said, in West Africa, where the Imperial Government had stationed "executive authorities."

Inquiry Into Native Trade

Last week we reported the statement of Captain F. E. Harris, Minister of Agriculture in Southern Rhodesia, in regard to the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry into all aspects of Native trade. The Commission has now been gazetted. It is to investigate the establishment of marketing boards to ensure the orderly sale of Native produce; survey the production and marketing of crops, livestock, minerals and manufactured articles by Africans; and consider whether bartering between Natives should be continued or money transactions substituted. Some steps are to be taken to inform Africans in Southern Rhodesia of the nature and purpose of the inquiry.

Africans In Southern Rhodesia

The Southern Rhodesian correspondent of The Times commented a few days ago:

"The Chief Native Commissioner in his report to the Southern Rhodesian Parliament on Native health says that the great problem is to bring the inhabitants of the more remote areas of the Colony within reach of medical attention. Much could be done in making land available for aircraft—a component part of any official activity in districts at present inaccessible. He hopes to see flying doctors when the provision of suitable aircraft makes this a practicable proposition. The indigenous population of the Colony is estimated at 1,850,365, an increase of 20% over 1942. Little interest is taken in the war except by a few educated Natives. This does not mean that they are apathetic or unappreciative of what is at stake, but that their faith in Britain has never been shaken." Summing up, the Commissioner says that the Natives have much to be thankful for. Their numbers are sufficient; stock has done well; prices of grain and cattle have risen; organized sales of cattle have brought large sums of money into the reserves; the war has not come near them, and employment is available near their homes."

Africa's New Problem: the War

Fundamental Changes Brought by War

AFRICA has suddenly become a world power, a place of strategic importance second only to the United States. Her economic development has become a matter of world concern. Some of the quiet air routes, less than half an hour, and before long, Nairobi will be only two hours from London. Trade nations of Africa, say in political and commercial future, will experience misfortune in Kenya and Rhodesia. This will not be the same after the war. But no part of Africa will be so fundamentally changed as the East African territories.

In 1942 the East African Church Mission Society, which was published 10 years ago under the title "People Matter,"

This most interesting document also contains the following passages:

"African soldiers in thousands have been taking part in the war, not only on African soil, but wherever they are needed, and they have won the respect and gratitude of the men with whom they have served. The P.M.C. (Practical Ministry College in Lusaka, now in Luton) is within its teens."

"Many thousands of Africans, taken from nearly all tribes, have been enlisted in the Army. With good food and under expert care and training, the force shows remarkable physical endurance, persistence and a remarkable hitherto unsuspected by many Europeans who had previously seen them in the underfed and underfed condition of their normal life, and so had formed a pessimistic view of their human quality. In particular, the work of the African Army Education Corps has disclosed in East Africa's remarkable capacity to instruct andaptitudes to learn."

"Britain has shown the sense of the importance and the rights of the African by carrying forward her Colonial development policy and extending the social services in spite of the demands of war. She has minimized it in Mr. Turner's plan that 'it is men and not dollars that win the war.' But does the Government, does the Church, and do C.M.S. supporters realize the breadth and depth of the challenge presented in Africa today?"

Africans Are Asking New Questions

Already the African is asking new questions: Does the Atlantic Charter apply to him? Has Russia found a way of progress which would suit him? Is he to be denied freedom in the economic sphere because of his colour?

The men in the Forces are becoming accustomed to a higher standard of living than they knew in their villages, is easy for them, as for people of other races, to think of this higher standard chiefly or only in terms of money and overlook other and more important factors. These and many other considerations which affect the African's attitude to life point to the necessity of clear thinking and resolute action in matters of education and of economic development as well as in the direct preaching of the Gospel.

From the earliest days of missionary work in tropical Africa the missionaries have seen education as part of their essential task, with the result that about 85% of those who are being educated south of the Sahara are in Christian schools. Figures available from Tanganyika show the proportion of pupils in voluntary (i.e. Christian) schools as compared with those under the auspices of the Government or the Native administrations.

	Government	N.A.	Aided voluntary	Unaided voluntary
No. of boys	121	3,671	17,557	26,619
Percentages	(11.4)	(6.8)	(32.8)	(61.8)

	Government	N.A.	Aided voluntary	Unaided voluntary
No. of girls	737	55	7,935	13,893
Percentages	(6.1)	(0.3)	(35.1)	(61.6)

These figures, typical of the position in British African territories, do not take account of the unregistered bush schools in the care of Church or mission. Some 190,000 pupils were attending such schools in Tanganyika, and the number would be large in all the territories.

In a very natural desire to increase educational facilities and ensure that a much higher percentage of boys and girls go to school, the Governments are encouraging the opening of schools by Native administrations on a wider scale. This recognition by the State of its responsibilities is challenging and welcome, but there is no guarantee that religion will be more than a formal element in the curriculum of such schools. That assurance would only have been possible if the Church in this country had risen to the opportunity offered in recent years and had supplied men and women in adequate numbers to staff grant-aided schools.

In the 1,000th issue of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA, the Government is listed for the first time of boys in the primary schools in Nairobi, but the tide is turning. The leading African newspaper have been agitating for a long time for a primary school for girls, and when the Governor visited the school, he asked him to get facilities for one at Lusaka. As a result, a primary class is being added to the 2nd May school at Nairobi. A good mortgage has been a great stimulus in Kenya, and there was no small indignation among educated Africans when facilities for the purchase of land were granted to local schools, but not to girls.

Co-education is going forward in the Upper Nile Diocese, and perhaps even faster. The dearth of girl teachers is serious hindrance. There are only 15 in the whole Teso district, though two others are training. The continual pressure of the Government to raise the standards and morale of the people is a positive factor in progress, although the more backward districts lag behind.

Twice Policy of Governments

Whatever plans may be made to improve education for higher education, the fact remains that the simple, often primitive, bush schools is the indispensable first rung of the ladder. Thus the percentage of children of school age who are in bush schools remains as low as 10% in Uganda, 20% in Kenya, and only 1% in Nigeria; there would seem to be abundant reason to encourage and help the Church, which is carrying by far the greater part of the general and financial responsibility for existing bush schools.

It is time for the Government to make more effective and economical man to initiate a parallel organization under the native administration, as I proposed

From all parts of Africa come urgent requests for secular literature. It seems tragic that at such a time the C.M.S. Workshops should be hampered by lack of paper, but a generous gift of 40 tons of paper has not reached mission presses in Africa from American friends.

Canon H. J. E. Butcher, in conjunction with Canon Hillier of the U.M.C.A., is at work in Mombasa on a few translations of the Old and New Testaments into Swahili, which after years of discussion has been standardized. In his plea for grants Archdeacon Owen places a literature specialist first. He makes the point that sound transitional work must be done by a man on the spot who can have constant touch with Africans so that they can give the Native idiom which most truly represents the original. The Authorized Version is almost pure English because the translators were putting it into their mother tongue.

An African has a great love for his village, yet the drift to the towns, so familiar in England, is now a feature in African life. Most of the men who joined the Forces went from village homes. Will they return to them and settle down after their experience of the wider world?

The conviction grows that educational policy must be combined with a programme for village uplift.

Dr. E. V. Hunter, the senior C.M.S. doctor in Uganda, draws attention to the advance in medical and health services which has taken place in different parts of the Protectorate. In the Eastern Province, where 20 years ago there were only two hospitals and four doctors, now there are 10 government hospitals, 37 doctors, and numerous small dispensaries and other medical posts.

Mengo Hospital continues its important work of training nurses. From 60 to 80 candidates enter the preliminary training school each year. Much of the preliminary course is in the hands of an African staff nurse. During their three years of teaching in the wards they take all the subjects required of an English State-registered nurse.

The Christian community in tropical Africa which has come into being as the result of the C.M.S. missions has reached the million mark. Large congregations are found in some towns, but for the most part Christians are country folk, and a newly-ordained deacon may find himself charged with the oversight of 100 or more congregations, and duties equivalent to those of an archdeacon in this country.

The Rev. Mr. G. Capon, who is in charge of theological training at Mombasa, Kenya, writes: "We hope that at the end of the year six candidates will be ordained to the priesthood and some 10 others to the diaconate. The six are of a type that will do good work for many years to come in the Native reserves, where among the 10,000 a few of the better educated and more able type. Beyond all question the great need is to have African clergy who are in themselves and in their lives living witnesses to the truths of the Gospel which they preach. I have found it consistently to be true that the better educated men are more responsive spiritually."

The Senior Chaplain of the East Africa Command wrote to Bishop Chambers with reference to three chaplains whom he had released for service. "They have taken the rough well and I have not had a grumble in command. It is most humbling to work with such untrained men in such sound Church teaching and so strong a faith. All three have gradually won the confidence and admiration of the European company commanders and commanding officers."

The War

Waste Alleged in Nyasaland

Casualties and Awards

THAT THE MILITARY AUTHORITIES in Nyasaland have been guilty of great waste was stated in the Legislative Council recently by Mr. H. G. Duncan, who said that camps had been located in ungrazed places, that some had been abandoned for reasons of health or lack of water, and that the same sites had been repeated elsewhere. The military engineer, having aesthetic taste, wished to thatch "askaris' huts with Dutch thatching and other fancy work, but did not seem to realize that he was wasting 75% of the grass he had obtained. The Nyasaland Defence Force, said Mr. Duncan, had neither expected to be put into battle dress and trained commando troops nor to be issued with three types of helmets and other unnecessary equipment.

Flying Officer Waldo Vaughan Mollett, of Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, formerly employed by Rhodesia Railways, has been reported missing, believed killed, as the result of air operations in February.

Flight Sgt., Air-Gunner William Henry Austin and Flight Sgt., Pilot Arthur Thane Moodie, both Rhodesians, previously reported missing, are now re-classified as "missing, believed killed in action."

Pilot Officer John David Dill Russel, before the war an employee of the Globe and Phoenix mine, Southern Rhodesia, has been posted missing. His wife lives in One Que.

Flight Sgt., Air-Gunner Ray Ellenhagen, son of Mr. A. N. Ellenhagen, of Bulawayo, is missing.

Two More D.F.C.s for Rhodesia Squadron

Flying Officer Joseph Bradburn, R.A.F.V.R., of No. 44 (Rhodesia) Squadron, has been awarded the D.F.C. The citation reads:

"This officer has completed very many sorties including nine attacks on the German capital. In one of these his aircraft was seriously damaged by anti-aircraft fire before reaching the target. In spite of this he went on to complete a successful attack and afterwards left the damaged aircraft base. In another attack on the same target his aircraft was intercepted by two enemy fighters, but he cleverly evaded them and pressed home his bombing attack. Shortly afterwards the aircraft was attacked by another fighter, but Flying Officer Bradburn manoeuvred to a good position and his gunners shot the attacker down. This officer has invariably displayed praiseworthy skill and courage."

Pilot Officer Ray Thomas Henry Manning, an Australian serving with No. 44 Squadron, R.A.F., has been awarded the D.F.C. The citation states:

Pilot Officer Manning has participated in numerous sorties against the most heavily defended enemy targets, including 10 attacks against Berlin. During one attack against Berlin an engine failed soon after crossing the enemy coast on the outward flight. Although it was not possible to attain the allotted altitude given for the attack, this officer flew on to Berlin at a height much below that of the main bomber force. Before reaching the target, the bomber was intercepted by an enemy aircraft which was only evaded after still further height had been lost. Nevertheless, the target was attacked successfully and the aircraft returned safely to base. Pilot Officer Manning has displayed cool courage and great determination in all his operational tasks."

Captain (Temporary Major) Francis Crofton Simms, The Royal Warwickshire Regiment, attached to the Sudan Defence Force, has been awarded the Military Cross.

Flight Sgt. William Henry Charles Collins, R.A.F., of Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, has been awarded the D.F.M.

Squadron Leader R. A. Mackie, who is described as the owner of two gold mines in Southern Rhodesia, was given a good deal of publicity in London newspapers last week, following the completion of his first tour of operations from this country, making 97 war operational flights altogether. He has served in Kenya, Ethiopia, Eritrea, Iraq and Libya and East Africa before coming to this country. He has bombed many of the main German targets.

The G.O.C. in C.A.F.E.A. Command, has commended the gallantry of Northern Rhodesian "askari," Private Litwala Mambwe, who rescued three soldiers from a burning hut in a military camp.

When the British colonies, the Rt. Rev. S. D. Heywood, received an indefinite number of East African refugees stricken by cholera in Swatini during part of the campaign.

Mr. Noel Coward arrived in Africa a few days ago to give entertainments.

We recently sent to us a team of 12 volunteers to help for the welfare of East African refugees of the Balkans in order to find suitable relief work in the Balkans as soon as circumstances permit. Mrs. M. P. Atassi, who has been appointed commandant of the team, served with the "Women's Legion" during the last war, has lived in Norway since 1939. She is also the founder member of the First Aid Nursing Yeomanry in the today. When the first refugee camp for Italian women and children was established in Nyeri in this war, she took charge of it, and was later engaged in the evacuation of Italian women and children from Eritrea and Ethiopia.

Provision for the Demobilized

So many South Africans have served in East Africa during this war, and so many Rhodesians are now under South African military command, that the proposals of the Union Government in regard to demobilization of its troops will be of wide general interest throughout East and Central Africa. The South African Government proposes to give gratuities at the rate of 80s. for each month of service by European men of whatever rank, 15s. per month to European women, 10s. to coloured men, and 8s. to Africans, payment being made in war loan certificates. A grant of £15 will be made to European men and women and £9 to coloured men for the purchase of civilian clothing. Africans will receive a land suit. It is expected that something like 3,000 demobilized men will find posts in the Civil Service and 1,000 in the police, while land settlement schemes will provide for between 3,000 and 8,500. Assistance is also to be given where necessary for the re-establishment of individuals in civil life. Grants up to £250 will be available in many cases. Those desiring to attend university courses will also be eligible for loans up to £600 at 4% interest, and for business purposes loans up to £1,250 may be made.

That part of the new tea acreage allotted to Nyasaland under the International Tea Restriction Scheme, should be reserved for development after the war by those who have served in the armed forces of the Empire, has been represented to the Governor by the Nyassaland Council of the British Empire Service.

The Emperor of Ethiopia has sent another 300 ounces of gold to the Secretary of State for Air "for the benefit of R.A.F. wounded and disabled." The Minister has given it to the R.A.F. Benevolent Fund.

The Kenya Farmers' Association has given £1,000 to the British Legion Fund in Kenya.

During 1943 there was 102,699 attendances at the Indian Seamen's and Soldiers' Institute, Mombasa, compared with 54,492 in 1942.

Franco Sees the Red Line

The Spanish Government have undertaken to close the Spanish Consulate-General in Tangier, and withdraw and arrange for the departure of the consul-general and all his staff. They have already expelled from Tangier, the Spanish zone of Morocco, and the Gibraltar area certain German agents who have been secret agents against British interests, and they are taking steps of expelling them in the mainland, Tangier, and Spanish Africa, other such agents, to whom His Majesty's Government have drawn their attention. The Spanish Government have given an assurance that the remaining Spanish units have been withdrawn from the Eastern Front, and that all survivors of the Blue Division and Blue Air Squadron have already returned to Spain, with the exception of a few wounded and a small administrative detachment supervising the withdrawal. Six of the Italian merchant ships retained in Spanish ports at the time of the Italian armistice have already been released. The remainder will now be released, except two whose ownership is in dispute, and which will be chartered to the Spanish Government subject to arbitration as to eventual ownership. The Spanish Government have agreed that the disposal of the Italian warships which sought refuge in Spanish ports after the armistice shall be settled by arbitration. In regard to wolfram, export permits granted to Germany during the current year will be drastically reduced. Twenty tons may be exported to Germany, in each of the months of May and June. Thereafter, for the rest of the year, if as a practical matter they can be made, exports will not exceed 40 tons a month. Throughout the three months when the details of this agreement were under discussion the Spanish Government maintained a complete embargo on all wolfram exports to Germany. As a result of the settlement reached with the Spanish Government on all the above points, each item of which marks a substantial gain for the United Nations and represents definite and concrete evidence of the intention of the Spanish Government to maintain neutrality, His Majesty's Government and the United States Government consider themselves justified in accepting once again the strain on Allied resources represented by the export of oil products to Spain. Permission will accordingly now be given for the renewal of petroleum loadings by Spanish tankers in the Caribbean and for the lifting from United States ports of minor quantities of packaged petroleum products.

Mr. Eden.

Background to

Britain Speaks to America.—In the United States we eat nearly three times as much fruit, twice as many eggs, about 20% more meat, milk, and sugar, and about 20% more fats than people do in England. The British war胸eats a good deal more empty than the British ladder! The only way in which we can achieve replacement after the war is through revival of our overseas trade. Before the war we imported two-thirds of our food, and most of the raw materials required by our industry—oil, cotton, wool, copper, iron, and timber. You have them all in the United States. We paid for these imports before the war at the rate of nearly £1,000,000,000 a year. First, by income from our capital invested overseas. Second, by the earnings of services like shipping and insurance. Third, by export. Most of our convertible overseas capital was sold before Lend-Lease to buy war materials. We have suffered grievous shipping losses. You, on the other hand, have built a vast merchant fleet, and by so doing saved the cause of the United Nations. For the sake of war production we have cut to the bone our pre-war export trade. With investments largely gone and shipping down, our export trade will be vastly more important if we are to reach even our pre-war level of imports, and that comes right home to the living standard of every one of our 42,000,000 citizens. If you and we mean to face the future together we shall each want our partner to be vigorous and strong. . . . We must try to assure to all producers a fair and steady price for what they have to sell. We must try to prevent the disastrous cycle of booms and slumps."—Lord Halifax.

Do's and Don't's.—"Be brief; put your cards on the table; use common sense; take responsibility; get on with the job. Don't say 'no' for the sake of it; don't say anything unless you are ready to answer for it; don't hesitate to exercise responsibilities entrusted to you. Be constructive and helpful; don't fight cases of little consequence." General Auchinleck's War Department Maxims."

United States war production this year at $17,500,000,000, will be almost equal to the total military production of the rest of the world put together, friend and foe alike."

Mr. Donald W. Davis, Vice-Chairman of the U.S. War Production Board.

Australia's Deliverance.—I do not think that any country faced greater danger with less resources than Australia did after the fall of Singapore. On the outbreak of war with Japan Australia had abroad three divisions of troops with a strength of 15,000 men and one air squadron in the Middle East; army units and more than 10,000 air personnel in England; one A.I.F. division of 18,000 men and three air squadrons in Malaya; and several infantry battalions in Pacific Islands. When Singapore fell, the Australian defence was inadequate to defend the country, and bomber and reconnaissance aeroplanes had been reduced to about 50 machines. In the southern Pacific area the Japanese are estimated to have lost from 100,000 to 115,000 troops, 140 to 170 warships, 200 to 270 merchant ships, and 5,000 to 6,000 aircraft."—Mr. Curtin, Prime Minister of Australia.

Preparing to Salvage Germany.—Believe it or not, the "Salvage Germany" is in full swing. Deeply concerned with preventing American people from falling into another German trap, we call attention to the declaration, cleverly saturated with democratic principles, issued by the newly-founded Council for German Democracy. It is a shocking fact that nowhere in the Council's declaration is there a single word of regret or remorse or intention of expiation for the innumerable atrocities, misdeeds and mass murders brought on the civilized world by the German people in arms.—American Society for the Prevention of World War III.

The Air Age.—A 200-ton liner with a range of 3,500 miles, carrying at least 200 passengers in accommodation comparable with that of a first-class ocean liner, and flying in the upper strata at a cruising speed of 400 m.p.h., is well within the bounds of possibility. We shall have air battle fleets comparable in disposition and duties with the naval fleets of today. . . . The battleship of the air, equipped with long-range armament and carrying its own protecting fighters, like young kangaroos in their mothers' pouch, is already possible. An actual aircraft-carrier of the air will have to be constructed, but in view of the equipment will be assisted by the development of the new power units at present in embryo."—Sir Frank Spriggs.

Adviser in Colonial Affairs

Appointed by The Conservative Party

MR. GERALD T. SAYERS has this week been appointed adviser on Colonial affairs to the Conservative and Unionist Party, and has already taken up his duties at the Central Office, 24 Old Queen Street, Westminster S.W.1.

Mr. Sayers went to Kenya in 1930 as an Assistant to the Commissioner and spent four years in the Colony of Nairobi before being seconded to the Secretariat, whence he was transferred to Tanganyika in 1930 as an Assistant Secretary. He remained in that Territory until 1934, when he went to Nyasaland as Assistant Chief Secretary. Five years later he retired from the Colonial Service, but soon afterwards received an administrative appointment in the Ministry of War Transport (now the Ministry of War Transport). Since his return from Africa he has also run a small farm in Surrey.

He edited the excellent official "Handbook of Tanganyika Territory," was first Clerk to the Legislative Council and first Press Liaison Officer appointed by the Tanganyika Government, was lent to assist Sir Alan Pim during his investigation into the finances and administration of Zanzibar, and during different leaves was seconded to the Colonial Office and the Dominions Office. He was one of the advisers in 1933 to the British Delegation to the International Conference on the Preservation of the Fauna and Flora of Africa.

Obituary

Mrs Sydney Thornton

We deeply regret to learn of the death in Nairobi some weeks ago of Mr. Sydney Thornton, secretary of the Land and Agricultural Bank of Kenya from 1931 till his recent retirement on account of ill-health. Born in London, he was for many years on the staff of the Land Bank in Southern Rhodesia, which he left to take up his appointment in Kenya. No official could have been more loyal to both Colonies. Even in territories rich in men with a gift of friendship, he must have been among the most popular, due by no means only to his happy and humorous attitude to life and his gay wit, but to his kindness, his abounding sympathy, and his unobtrusive help to those in any difficulty. He was one of the best after-dinner speakers in East Africa, and had been President of the Nairobi Rotary Club, the local Branch of the Society of St. George, and the Aero Club.

Colonel Harold McMicking

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Empire Debate in CommonsOur Report of Mr. de Chair's SpeechTo the Editor of "East Africa and Rhodesia"*

SIR.—In your otherwise very full and fair report of the Empire debate in the House of Commons in our issue of April 27, you have omitted me—saying that “in fact, it was the titanic eruptions of world power around us which can no longer allow us to consider the Empire and a second-rate administration of the Colonial parts in it.” What I said was: “We can no longer afford the luxury of a haphazard association between the self-governing members of the Empire and a second-rate administration of the Colonial parts of it.”

I also note that in your leading article you are kind enough to hope that Mr. Hore-Belisha and myself will “have heard more often on such topics. I shall certainly take your admonition to heart, and must plead that service away in the Middle East, and hence I have been wounded by my pre-occupations as Parliamentary Under-Secretary to Mr. Oliver Lyttelton, have made it difficult for me to take an active part in debates on the Empire; but you may be interested to know that I did at least devote a large part of my maiden speech, on entering the House in 1935, to the subject of bringing the self-governing Dominions into co-operation with the United Kingdom in the administration of the Colonial Empire, and I am Chairman of a Committee in the House of Commons which is studying the problems of Burma.

Houses of Parliament, London, S.W.1. SOMERSET DE CHAIR.

The words italicized in the first paragraph of this letter were in fact included in the report prepared for publication in this journal, but the line of type in which they were set was unfortunately omitted in error.—ED.

Post-War Development in Tanganyika

Sir Wilfrid Jackson, Governor of Tanganyika, said at last week's inaugural meeting of the recently-appointed Development Committee that proposals already made and under study would involve an expenditure of £3,000,000 and a trained staff of 500. The most advanced plans concerned the expansion of health services, Native agriculture, soil conservation, stock-breeding, water supplies, and air services. The full plan for educational expansion had already been sent to the Colonial Office. Non-Native settlement and road plans were only in outline at present. The Governor stated that settlement was most important, “but there are special conditions affecting the situation of this Territory which have arisen since the war.”

Rich Prehistoric Find in KenyaDr. Leakey's Discovery in Great Rift Valley

ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT DISCOVERIES in the history of African archaeology was reported from Kenya a few days ago. The site of the discoveries is in the Great Rift Valley, near Mount Olorgesailie, 41 miles from Nairobi, and great numbers of fossilised animal remains and prehistoric stone implements have already been uncovered.

Olorgesailie Site 10, in the valley, is believed, says the Colonial Office Press Section, to be not only the richest prehistoric site in Africa but one of the most important in the world. The fossils and remains are largely those of the Acheulean culture of the Middle Stone Age, which existed hundreds of thousands of years ago.

Of Great Scientific Importance

Site 10 was first located early in 1940 when an area of bright limestone was discovered. Excavation of the area was started by Dr. L. S. B. Leakey, Curator of the Corporation Museum, Nairobi, and was joined by Dr. Leakey who is now busy in war-time duties with the Royal Naval Service. He has been accompanied by Mrs. Leakey, Mr. A. J. Arkell (the Commissioner for Archaeology in the Sudan), Miss E. Cory, Mr. F. de V. Kirk and Mr. G. Alan.

The excavations thus carried out showed that the surface indications noted earlier had not been misleading and that Olorgesailie Site 10 is of outstanding importance. The site is 800 yards long and 600 yards wide.

Trial trenches have revealed that the deposits consist of lake beds alternating with land surfaces. Upon four of the land surfaces, or layers, which have been exposed there are abundant signs of occupation in the form of large numbers of hand-axes, cleavers, and cores stones, all being closely associated with the fossilized remains of extinct animals.

Another discovery of great scientific importance—though it is less spectacular than the occupation levels of the Acheulean peoples—is the finding of another occupation floor that represents the first well-authenticated evidence of the existence of a flake-culture people anywhere in East Africa in the deposits of the Middle Pleistocene.

Skull of Pig as Large as Rhinoceros

It is hoped that when it is possible to carry out fuller excavations at Olorgesailie after the war, further important finds of stone-age cultures will be found and there seems every prospect that the fossilized remains of stone-age humans will be uncovered.

Animals found include those of extinct species—elephant, hippopotamus, giraffe and rhinoceros, a baboon that was as big as a gorilla, and a pig that was as large as a present-day rhinoceros.

The Government of Kenya has fenced the site, and it is proposed that the various occupation floors shall be exposed and then roofed so that visitors may see the implements and fossils lying in position as they were left hundreds of thousands of years ago.

The road to Olorgesailie passes through the Southern Game Reserve. Tourists to the site would descend into the Great Rift Valley and could also visit the great soda lake of Magadi.

Inter-Territorial Organization

Two Points of View in Uganda

"I HAVE HAD CONSIDERABLE EXPERIENCE of the so-called inter-territorial bodies, and the more I see of them and their work the less I like them at least in the present guise," said Mr. H. R. Fraser, one of the non-official members of Council, when recently addressing the Uganda Legislature. He continued:

The main trouble about these Councils is that they are dominated by people who are right under the thumb of the Government of Kenya, and every director on the East African Supply and Production Council or head of a joint service is regarded by the Government of Kenya as a Kenya civil servant. This applies to the Chairman of the Council, the Governors' Conference Secretariat, the General Manager of the Railways, the Postmaster-General and the Comptroller of Customs. I wonder whether any of these gentlemen really consider themselves anything but Kenyans.

The African Supply and Production Council has a somewhat similar title but does no more than, if as much as, the old joint Kenya and Uganda Supply Boards, and certainly with much less satisfactory results to Uganda. All the Council appears to have done is to have usurped the place of the old Supply Board and reappear under a new name as a state-controlled body with practically no representation on its executive side from Uganda. The result is that we get little or no results from any representations made from Uganda; and yet we are governed by a body which affects most tremendously the economic life of Uganda.

Joint Legislature for Kenya and Uganda?

"As at present constituted, the Governors' Conference Secretariat has produced a situation unparalleled in the history of Uganda, as we are no longer governed by our own Government or legislature, but by an unconstitutional form of committee or committee situated in Nairobi which dictates to Government as to what can and what not be done within Uganda itself. If this situation continues to continue, then I can only suggest a small joint Legislative Council of Kenya and Uganda formed specifically to watch over and govern these inter-territorial bodies."

This is not a tirade against inter-territorial co-operation in general; it is simply to bring to the notice of Government how I know most of the public in Uganda regard the present position of Uganda vis-a-vis Kenya under the present arrangements. The Governors' Conference might find it desirable to review the position immediately, especially if there is any desire for closer collaboration between the neighbouring territories after the war."

The Financial Secretary, Mr. S. Phillipson, thought it premature either to criticize or defend the Production and Supply Council, the first two meetings of which had, he thought, given promise of useful development.

The Chief Secretary, Mr. J. E. S. Merritt, said:

"I have practical experience of only one inter-territorial council, the Railway Advisory Council, with which I have been associated for more than a dozen years. It has its own teething troubles many years ago, but the passage of time and the contacts established have resulted in a broader inter-territorial outlook. Emergency organizations naturally have a more difficult task when immediate decisions have to be taken, as they do in war-time problems which come down with greater alacrity. But it must give considerable thought if it is not always easy to do so."

Nairobi's Dislike

"My own associations, both in industry and in politics whenever I have seen them, have always proved that they are ready to listen to our point of view. The trouble has been that in the past we have generally had to go to Nairobi, and sometimes deal with emergency situations not previously brought to notice. Now, unfortunately, I am glad to say, getting the directors or other responsible men up here, and I hope that training if there have been any, will receive them more easily."

Mr. G. F. Clay, Director of Supplies, said:

"My own view—and I speak with confidence for nearly two years on the other end of the telescope—is that the existing inter-territorial bodies only bring in unnecessary difficulties, and that they have now reached a point where some of the trouble in East Africa, and have been less than they have been."

He was started off with the Inter-Territorial Supply Board, then the old Kenya and Uganda Board, and then formed the Economic Council, the only part of which was to bring Tanganyika into the picture. Then he formed the East African Civil Supplies Board. Then the need to do more of that sort of it in Kenya, because of the fact that Kenya had been and still is more vitally concerned in their ing the needs of a greater expanded military and civil population for a more responsible body, and so this big inter-territorial Civil Defence and Supply Council was formed. Later on Excellency volunteered to join that Council and made a joint Kenya and Uganda Council, and later on other territories, seeing the need for inter-territorial co-operation, decided to join the East African Civil Defence and Supply Council."

"With the need for concentration on inter-territorial activities became of less importance whereas problems of production and supply were assuming ever-growing importance, the logical development of this Council was the African Production and Supply Council, a completely independent chairman who is able to sit down and concentrate on the problems of production and supply. Very early back we had problems of production and supply, and we solved them, and at 26th May the evolution to the Production and Supply Council as its forerunner we have got four years since at least four different bodies."

"We now come to the stage where, in so far as Native production is concerned, there is a great variety of the territories, including Zanzibar, Uganda, and so on, the East African Production Committee. We have in the last 18 months been trying inter-territorial co-operation to effect disposal. Native production is based on a very strong basis in regard to price, evacuation and export overseas, and so it has a number of specific industries of its own, like hides and skins, cotton, and oilseeds, etc., etc."

"Those are concrete examples of the value of the East African Council, which has as its directorial members a large part, if not the whole, of their respective delegations of matters of inter-territorial concern in production and supply. Then again I think it is only reasonable to say that the Council's activities some of the members of co-operation of transport and storage, both by the rail system and at its port of Mombasa, which has had heavy demands in accommodation and facilities by the Services which have used that port during the time we were here, creating difficulties."

Inter-Territorial Co-operation in War

In recent times the value of the Council is evident as a clearing-house for information regarding food shortages and territorial surpluses and I think Uganda found the Council useful last year in being able to meet the requirements of Kenya and Tanganyikathrough a Agency Assistant Director of Produce Disposal. I believe that reasonably disposed, in view could not fail to bring us to the conclusion that inter-territorial co-operation is necessary, and is more necessary than ever during the difficult period which we are passing through, particularly in matters of production, which will continue to be a source of some concern to the territories for some time after the cessation of hostilities."

"I should like to lay tribute from my experience in Nairobi to the strength derived from the sense of the storm clouds I used to call them from Uganda to Nairobi when I was up there. The balance was fully realized by the people in Nairobi and those missions abroad, and lengthily very often although they may have done good, and a lot of that good may derive from the advice given by the Uganda members. I hope I have said enough to dispel some of the doubts, for I feel that the value of the council, had it been formed two or three years ago, would have been more evident than at this critical stage in East Africa's history."

This The Main Stumbling Block?

Mr. E. Gillman, former Chairman of the Tanganyika Railways and afterwards Water Consultants to the Government of the Territory, refers in the course of a letter to the Journal of the Royal African Society ("The Development of Tanganyika") that "the only yield, antagonism between the 'technical' departmental officer and the administrative user—of who was often as non-concerned with development as synonymous with 'more tax'—it is this antagonism which is one of the main psychological stumbling blocks in the path of all technical or social, mere lip-service development." He also writes of the "two seemingly irremediable taboos—discretion and possessive," which, perhaps more than any other attitude, is frustrating any move on the part of administrators to help our Native trust in the future for forward development by forcing him to do so with our superior insight and understanding. He tells us to be essential in their very own interest. Yet one wonders, do such taboos not exist in the minds of the British administrator's colleagues across the French and Belgian borders?"

Centenary of C.M.S. in Kenya

Anniversary of Krap's Arrival in Mombasa

LAST SUNDAY marked the hundredth anniversary of the arrival in Mombasa as a representative of the Church Missionary Society of Krap, the first missionary of modern times to reach the mainland of East Africa. He was to be the first man to translate the New Testament into Swahili, the first to compile a dictionary of the language, and the first editor of Musings in Africa and Kenya. It is therefore fitting that the Anglican Church in Kenya should celebrate the centenary of the arrival of the great pioneer missionary and the Diocese of Mombasa has this week launched its appeal for an endowment fund of at least £50,000 for the extension of its work.

General Smuts has sent a message of good will:

"The work done by missionaries in Central Africa has greatly enriched the minds of African labour. May I continue to bless the work and His workers in Central Africa."

The Governor of Kenya has written:

"... we are passed beyond the pioneer stage, and it is only right, and indeed in consonance with local sentiment generally, that we should increasingly be allowed to work out our own salvation. It will be a sounder approach to the security of their possessions if members of the Anglican Church in the Diocese do not take this opportunity of providing adequate funds to ensure that their Bishop is properly provided for and that the extending activities of the Church are carried on."

The work in what is now Kenya was under the episcopal oversight of the Bishop of Mauritius from the establishment of that see in 1844 to 1884. The Diocese of Zanzibar and East Africa was founded in 1881, but Mombasa remained under Mauritius until the appointment of Bishop Hannington, first Bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa, in 1884. In 1897 the Dioceses of Mombasa and Uganda were formed by a subdivision of the Diocese of Eastern Equatorial Africa, and since the last was the Diocese of Central Tanganyika has been taken out of the Diocese of Mombasa, leaving the area under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Mombasa co-extensive with the Colony and Protectorate of Kenya.

The Diocese of Mombasa has 18 mission stations, nearly 800 organized congregations, 18 European and 36 African clergy, 70 European male and female lay workers (including the wives of missionaries), 807 African women workers, and 1,535 African lay workers, including educational and medical staff. There are about 100,000 adherents of the Church, some 20,000 being communicants, and between 30,000 and 40,000 still under instruction.

U.M.C.A. Anniversary Meetings

The Archbishop of Canterbury is to speak at the evening anniversary meeting of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa, to be held in London on May 22. The Rt. Rev. G. H. Birley, until recently Bishop of Zanzibar, the Rev. S. R. Bradby, of that diocese, Miss E. Dodds, formerly in Government service in Zanzibar, and the Rev. L. Gerald Broomefield and the Rev. L. A. F. Rawnsley, general secretary and assistant secretary of the mission, will be the speakers at the afternoon and evening meetings at 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. at the Central Hall, Westminster.

Kenya's Dried Vegetable Works

Kenya's new dehydration industry, which is now stated to be capable of processing 94 tons of potatoes, 80 tons of carrots, and 80 tons of cabbages daily, has developed since commencing its undertaken at Uplands before the war. Mr. Dr. Kondor, of Czechoslovakia, said Mr. P. G. Chambers, of the Department of Agriculture in Kenya, when recently addressing the Nairobi Rotary Club.

New Products from Sisal

Active Research Essential Now

Major Conrad L. Walsh said in his fourth talk in the "Calling East Africa" programme of the B.B.C. that his company had planned before the war to produce a softened sisal fibre capable of spinning to at least 8 lea and had in fact produced one which spun to 4 lea, against a normal spinning of sisal fibre to 1 lea; further investigation could have shown that in the plantations where the fibre could be treated as it came from the decorticator and before a scalding bath was set in because it had a complex rather like silk, it would rapidly absorb water and swelled and sank when in water like marine cordage, but not as a result of a water proofing process it would float for many hours. Research had also shown that sisal could be hardened into bristles for the manufacture of brooms, brushes and combs, used in the manufacture of hats, in bookbinding, carpeting and upholstery, and proceeded to repeat some of the present uses of hessian, which sells at twenty-five per cent. He pleaded for a balanced economy within the sisal industry, and stressed the importance of active research now, not years hence when other competitive fibres had claimed the new markets which research was revealing.

Indian Immigration into Kenya

While Indian spokesmen in East Africa, especially in Kenya, have protested vigorously against the restrictions recently imposed upon the entry of persons of Indian race who cannot show that they will perform useful service in the war effort, the Kenya Information Office has announced, in a statement which has just reached London, that "some 2,315 Asians have arrived by sea in Mombasa during the last three months, mainly by dhow." The latest issue of the Indian-owned Kenya Daily Mail to reach this country quotes the port captain of Mombasa as stating that he personally inspected 16 dhows on their arrival during the previous week-end, and that two, which had carried 162 and 172 passengers respectively from India, would be permitted by the Mombasa port regulations to carry only 88 and 84 persons on the return voyage, including the crews. The port captain also stated that he would insist on each dhow carrying a minimum of one gallon of water per day per passenger for a voyage of six weeks and adequate food for the same period.

Ethiopia's Test Case

That the future of Great Britain depends more upon the relations evolved with the coloured races than upon any other single factor was suggested in a leading article in the London Living Standards on Saturday. The editorial concluded:

"It is no accident that Charles James Fox, the statesman who most clearly the implications of the quarrel with the American Colonies, was also the statesman who saw the most deadly blow at the slave trade, after the pro-slavery Pitt, had prevaricated and failed to act. Fox knew that the boast of freedom was also the foundation of our strength in the manner in which we deal with our fellow Ethiopean coloured peoples all over the world. Let us look for a test shot whether the magnanimous and liberating ideals of fox still prevail in this field."

New Sudan Advisory Council

The first session of the New Advisory Council for the Northern Sudan will open next Monday. Among eight members appointed by the Governor-General are two members of the Sudanese National Council, the chairman of the Sudanese executive, an Arab newspaper owner and the assistant warden of the Gordon Memorial College. Two members represent the Chamber of Commerce and 18 the Ammara tribe.

Conditions in Ethiopia Today Emperor's Gratitude Tempered by Grievances

A report on conditions in Ethiopia by a writer who recently returned from that country was contributed to The Times of last Friday. The correspondent said, inter alia:

"The Italians" during five years of fascist domination had "left a spiritless people." They had killed or condemned to death many who had not done "They took the schools and their own children and educated Ethiopians." They set up an elaborate and venal bureaucracy. Their lavish expenditure—nearly £15,000,000 of capital and an annual contribution of £10,000,000 to the local budget—raised the cost of living without doing anything to fit the people for modern development. They invested over £50,000,000 in constructing motor roads, fine engineering, but costly to maintain; and smaller sums for medical services, industrial and industrial quarters for their colonists, in public works. They failed to benefit the country save the roads. The hospitals were without doctors, the schools without teachers, the factories without machines and workers, the offices without trained officials.

Appointment of British Advisors

Under the agreement of 1941, British advisers were appointed to the Ministries of the Interior, Finance, Justice, Education, Commerce and Public Works. A few British were appointed to executive posts and two British judges to the High Court. British teachers direct boys' and girls' schools. The British Council opened an English institute to teach English to adults in Addis Ababa, and several provincial towns and an Anglo-Ethiopian Club to foster social contacts. Friends Ambulance Unit followed the road to look to the medical, hygienic and social needs of the civil population. Some were doctors, some medical students; some had experience of teaching, others were practical or business men trained in social work. Many eager to serve, asked for no salary, and were remote from politics.

During the last three years there has been steady progress in many fields, though the direction and pace of the Ethiopian Ministries may not always be that of their British advisers, and the desire for education and social reconstruction may sometimes outrun the budget.

The Emperor has been particularly concerned to strengthen the central government and substitute a more centralized administration for the semi-feudal system of the tribes in the provinces. This has provoked some local resistance, and the Ethiopian Army, with British officers, has twice been called upon to put down minor rebellions. The army is at present a necessary instrument of the Emperor's power and is steadily improving public security. Ethiopians are being trained to command it at a military college conducted by the British mission.

The Middle East Supply Council and the United Kingdom Commercial Corporation export wheat and hides to neighboring countries. A beginning has been made with the tapping of wild rubber in the abundant forests. Sack and rope are being manufactured from banana fibre, and textile factories are working with local and Egyptian cotton. At the Emperor's invitation the American Government is sending a technical mission to study the possibilities of agricultural, industrial and mineral development, air of transport.

Justice and Education

The Emperor has established a High Court with permanent professional judges who exercise jurisdiction over all persons, natives and foreigners, and even officials who transgress the law. The Capitulations, established by the Italians, have not been restored, but a foreign subject can ask for trial before a British judge. A criminal code, based on the traditional law, has been promulgated; there is no civil code, and the judges decide cases according to custom or the principles of natural justice, equity, and good conscience. Lawyers are few, half a dozen foreigners and as many natives—or about one to a million inhabitants—and that is perhaps as well in a primitive society.

Education is another of the Emperor's special interests, for he realizes that it must be the basis of reconstruction and of a modern administration. Besides restoring elementary schools in Addis Ababa and other towns, he has founded a secondary school in the capital for the training of administrators, civil servants and teachers. English is the language of instruction, and most of the teachers are British. He has opened a technical school for mechanics and a crafts school to improve the local weaving and pottery.

Eleven Indian doctors of the British military service and British doctors of the civil service are training Ethiopians to be dressers and barbers.

The Emperor hopes to see the substitution of new items for the military convention and the agreement of 1941. Some of the provisions in the latter correspond with the situation since the tide of war has receded from Africa. He also desires more financial help than he receives at present, for the agreement envisaged a steadily diminishing scale for the British grant. Although the yield of taxation is rising, its increase does not balance the diminution of the grant in aid. The problem how to combine Ethiopia's complete independence with her uncompleted policy awaits solution. The Emperor's gratitude is tempered by grievances.

Ethiopian Reception

On the occasion of the third anniversary of the return of the Emperor, a function was held at the British Embassy, Ethiopian Minister of Information, reception last Friday at the Ethiopian Legation, Princes' Gate, London, S.W. Many Ministers, High Commissioners, and members of the Diplomatic Corps attended. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Eden, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Law, Lord Farthing, Lord Horder, Miss Winifred Adams M.P., Mr. Alexander Le Maistre, Mr. and Mrs. Balfe, Mr. and Mrs. Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress, Sir Henry Harber, Sir Sidney and Lady Baker, Mr. Norman Bentwich, Sir H. E. Bevin, Mr. John Murray, Dr. Seligmann, Mr. and Mrs. Chapman Andrews, and Miss Pankhurst.

Miseries and Mass Education

The current issue of the C.M.S. Outlook says in the course of a two-column review of the recent British Paper on "Mass Education in African Society":

"In so far as disappointment has been expressed at the failure of education in the rural areas, it is not unusual among missionaries as educationists, and indeed they would seem to be on Government departments and officials who all too often know little in these days of life in the mass, what after all is to be found the stage upon which the mass education drama will be played."

Questions in Parliament.

Co-ordination of Scientific Research

Mr. Salt asked the Prime Minister whether advantage would be taken of the presence of the Dominion Prime Ministers in this country to discuss the desirability of establishing some better machinery for the development and co-ordination of scientific research and development in all parts of the British Empire.

Colonial Secretary. "I am glad to say that this matter will certainly receive consideration."

Mr. Edgar Grinville asked the Secretary of State for Air if it was intended to use flying boats in landing supplies for British Empire routes in civil aviation, instead of the way.

Sir Alexander Cadogan. "I am not able to say what steps were proposed to implement the proposal in the Report of the Mass Education in African Society Committee."

Mr. Sorensen. "I have commended the report warmly for the consideration of the Colonial Governments concerned and I am awaiting their views."

Mr. Sorensen asked for what offences corporal punishment was inflicted on civilians in East and West African Colonies.

Colonial Secretary. "In the East and West African Colonies corporal punishment may be imposed on civilians for certain offences against morality and against the person. It may also be awarded under the prison rules for certain serious prison offences, such as mutiny, violence and gross insubordination."

In reply to a question by Mr. A. Edwards, Colonel Stanley said: "A full census of production at frequent intervals would, I fear, be administratively impracticable in most Dependencies of some time to come." I understand, however, that the possibility of arranging more limited surveys of production has already been under consideration by the Colonial Economic Advisory Committee. In the course of a general review of Colonial statistics which I have asked them to undertake, and for which I await their recommendations,

Sir Peter Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Air how many aircraft, the property of the Crown, were being operated by the British Overseas Airways Corporation.

Captain Halsbury: "The Corporation is at present operating 106 aircraft allotted by His Majesty's Government for purposes connected with the war."

Budget and the Colonies

Sir W. Edge asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether British firms operating overseas would be able to claim the concessions to industry accorded by this year's budget to trading concerns in this country.

Sir John Anderson: "Yes, sir. The proposals mentioned in my budget speech with regard to post-war income tax on industry will apply whether the taxable profits of a concern liable to United Kingdom Tax are in this country or abroad."

The House of Commons considered one of the budget resolutions which reads:

"That, for the purposes of the proposal to subsection (1) of Section 24 of the Finance Act, 1920, the relief provided for by Section 27 of that Act shall be left out of the account in computing (a) the amount of the income tax payable by an individual; and (b) the amount which would be payable by him by way of income tax if the tax were chargeable on his total income from all sources, including income which is not subject to income tax charged in the United Kingdom; and it is hereby declared that it is expedient in the public interest that this resolution should have statutory effect under the provision of the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913."

Mr. Benson: "Could we have an explanation of this not very lucid resolution?"

The Attorney-General (Sir Donald Somervell): "Suppose a man has only part of his income liable to United Kingdom income tax. Should he have a personal allowance, and, if so, how much? Take a concrete case. A man has an income of £1,200 a year, of which £400 is in this country and, therefore, liable to U.K. income tax, while £800 is outside this country. Provision has been made in past Finance Acts that, not in all cases, but if the owner is a British subject or comes within certain other categories which are set out in Section 27 of the Finance Act, 1920, he shall be given a proportion of the allowance. In this case one-third of the man's income is liable to U.K. income tax, and it was intended, under Section 27 of the 1920 Act, that he should have one-third of the allowance. His total income is £1,200 a year. If it were all in this country and all subject to taxation, he would pay £240. Let him pay one-third of that amount. The effect is to give him one-third of his personal allowance."

A case came before the courts recently where the court

the income which was outside the United Kingdom was in the Dominions, and it was decided in the courts that, under Section 24 unintentionally, as I think is quite plain, in making the calculation as to what would have been the tax payable if all the income had been here, you would have to take into account that he had to pay it in the Dominion income tax. It is clear that that was not intended, and that the House had inadvertently brought in part of the income tax code with regard to relief against double taxation which is not applicable to this particular type of calculation.

This in no way interferes with the provisions which exist to see that taxation is not paid twice over in respect of Dominion and United Kingdom income tax. It is a small, technical point, but the House of Commons could do well in complicating that great reform by bringing in a British subject resident, say, in the United States and another resident in the Dominions. We have got that sorted out and put right."

Mr. Benson. "I thank the Attorney-General for his explanation. I am not sure that it is clear yet."

Colonial Attorney-General. "It is very difficult to explain without a blackboard. The calculation has always, until this recent case, been made on the basis which I have explained, and no one has challenged it. If a third of a man's income is here, you give him only one-third of the allowance. Only in the recent case in the Courts of Appeal has it been shown that the words used resulted in a man getting more than one-third of the allowances to which he was entitled, although he had only one-third of his income here. It is the purpose of this resolution to make the law as it has been administered since it was put on the Statute Book, without complaint from anybody until this case arose."

The resolution was adopted.

Logical but Admirable

Logically a chief ought to be a Government servant or a representative of the Native. In practice he is both. He is a man selected by the Government and paid by the Government, but he usually enjoys a considerable local following. If he were not nominated by the Government, he would probably be elected by the voters. For this indefensible system it can only be claimed that it works quite admirably!" — Mr. K. Gandar Dower.

Is there, in fact, no earlier instance of a Northern Rhodesian African matriculating?

Nutrition in The Colonies

and there are all kinds of financial and other obstacles, such as a small currency or, further, lack of knowledge of animal husbandry, and gold mining, is often frequently a result of overstocking.

The fact that cattle and sheep seem more resistant to many of the prevalent diseases, and able to live almost anywhere suggests one line of progress. On the other hand, the need to teach to be done in improving animal raising, developing better methods and better equipment to support larger herds, but this can be achieved only through expansion in the agricultural and veterinary services at present far too limited. There may also be scope for the development of meat and milk by-products, and modern methods of canning, refrigeration and dehydration offer special opportunities. The first signs of development may be seen in the ghee industries in parts of Africa, the successful condensate milk factory in Jamaica and the meat factory in Kenya.

Milk Consumption Should Be Raised

There is no room to compete in itself or so necessary in time of war period, but results. It is an error to accept the indifference or even the positive objection of some of our Colonial peoples to talk as fixed and immovable. Hence either, to confront custom boldly, the right means must be sought to limit milk consumption in day times.

In this country one of the greatest advances yet made for the better nutrition of our people has been the issue of milk as an extra to the ordinary dietary of the average population. That principle applies equally for children everywhere, and in most Colonies a start has been made in a small way with maternity and child welfare clinics and schools. There are many means by which the work could be extended. Herds could, for instance, be developed in connexion with big schools and institutions.

Again modern dehydration offers possibilities for distributing the milk from the little areas of the world to what ever areas are in need of it.

Other sources of animal protein are fish and eggs. But here again the problem of local taboos may arise, some tribes regarding fish as an unclean food, while in parts of Africa women may be forbidden eggs, which are held to make them infertile. However, these customs, like others, may eventually be altered.

There exist immense possibilities of fish production from inland waterways and the sea. Extensive survey work has already been done, a Fisheries Adviser and a Fisheries Advisory Committee have recently been appointed to the Colonial Office, but the fish resources of the Empire remain largely untapped.

To break the vicious circle of malnutrition and ill-health, the use on a very considerable scale of concentrated supplements, such as the new food yeast, dried green stuffs and even synthetic vitamins, may be regarded as a justifiable expedient. It should not be suggested, however, that these will in any way take the place of a good mixed diet, and it is unfortunate that some of the publicity given to food yeast has given this impression.
