The government has increased its allocation to public universities in a move aimed at matching it with student population.

According to the Kenya Economic Survey report released on Wednesday last week, university enrolment rose by 22.8 per cent; from 361,379 in 2013 to 443,783 in 2014.

Two weeks ago, the government said it would establish a universities funding board that will be tasked with developing transparent and fair criteria for allocation of money to the institutions.
