

Elective term UoN students at University of Oxford

Date and time:

Wed, 2015-09-23 14:57

Location / Venue:

UoN/Oxford

It is with great pleasure to announce that two University of Nairobi students have been accepted for Elective term at the University of Oxford. These are Irene Nzisa Martin and Christine Atolo Onyango.

The two won a fully paid elective term at Oxford on merit. This is as a result of the collaboration between the University of Nairobi's Department of Paediatrics and Child Health, the University of Oxford and KEMRI-Wellcome Trust.

This is what they said "We are humbled to have been selected to do our elective term at the University of Oxford. The elective scholarship was highly competitive involving writing an essay from which the best two were selected. During the 8 week period we will have the opportunity to attend lectures, have various tutorials and make presentations during case based teaching. We will also interact with patients during on call opportunities, ward rounds and clinics. So far the lecturers and the Oxford students are friendly and we are looking forward to learning as much as possible.

We would like to thank the sponsors: The University of Nairobi, KEMRI- Wellcome Trust and the University of Oxford for making this opportunity possible."

We wish them well in their stay.

